British Debt Default Held Sure if U. S. Rejects Token

Note Refusing Payment Is Due to Be Sent This Week.

Waiting Policy Adopted Here

French Cabinet Meets Tuesday to Decide Stand on Issue

(Copyright, 1934, by United Press.)

London, June 2.—Default by Great Britain on her war debt to the United States appeared almost inevitable tonight.

The cabinet, it was learned on good authority, has definitely decided not to make even a token payment on June 15 and to default unless a token payment is recognized as relieving the stigma of default.

In that case, a small payment might be made, but Washington has consistently declined to regard a token payment as nondefault. Britain's note on the subject, making her position clear, probably will go to Washington within a few days. The note was drafted early this week, but was held up in the faint hope that President Roosevelt might relax his attitude.

The President's debt message to Congress, however, dispelled that hope. His challenge to pay up instead of spending the money on armaments was deeply resented.

Members of the Government, studying the message, took note, however, that in some points it agreed with the British view, particularly the reference to war debts having a disturbing effect on trade. They also commented upon Mr. Roosevelt's reiteration of his readiness at all times to discuss the general debt position.

Reports abroad that Britain had reached some form of agreement with the United States on the June 15 payment were regarded here as highly improbable. It was insisted on high authority that Britain has not yet acted, although the cabinet's mind is made up.

Great Britain's total debt to the United States is $4,636,157,358. She is in arrears $176,120,246 by reason of recent partial token payments, and owes an additional $85,670,765 on June 15. Of the 15 European debtors to the United States, only Finland has kept up payments, and a general default this time appeared more than likely, except perhaps in the case of Finland.

As an alternative to default, it was considered possible that pro-

North Carolina Gives Pou Lead

Bulwinkle, Wirt 'Red Plot' Prober, Ahead in Early Check of Primaries.

Charlotte, N. C., June 2 (AP).—Stanley Winborne, utilities commissioner, drew rapidly away from E. C. Macon, of Asheville, in the only Statewide race as scattering returns from today's Democratic primary were compiled tonight.

In the Congressional races, returns were too meager to indicate the probable outcome.

With 87 precincts of 1,832 reported in the race for Commissioner, Winborne has 12,149 votes against 3,349 for Macon.

George Ross Pou took the lead in the contest for the nomination as representative in the Fourth District. A post made vacant by the death of his father, Representative E. W. Pou, on April 1.

Nineteen of 152 precincts gave Pou 3,318 against 2,525 for Harold D. Cooley, of Nashville.

In the Tenth District, Maj. Aldred L. Bullwinkle, held a lead over Hamilton C. Jones, with returns compiled from 74 precincts of 254.

Representative Frank Hancock, jr., has a long lead over Mrs. Lily Mebane, of Spray, the State's only woman candidate.

Representative Bayard Clark leads L. C. Grane, of Wilmington, for the Sixth District; W. B. Umstead, present Representative, had a slight margin over Bruce Carraway; Representative John H. Kerr, was off in front of A. O. Dickens in the Second District.

G. A. Barden held a slight advantage over Representative C. L. Abernethy in the Third District, in early returns.

Codos and Rossi Plan Good-Will Tour of U. S.

New York, June 2 (AP).—Capt. Maurice Rossi and Lieut. Paul Codos, French transatlantic fliers who landed in New York Monday, after an unsuccessful attempt to fly nonstop from Paris to San Diego, announced today that they would make a good-will flight around the United States before returning to France.

A definite itinerary for the good-will tour has not been determined, but it was stated that it will include most of the larger cities of the country.

Death Closes Rolph's Colorful Career at 64

JAMES ROLPH, Jr.

San Jose, Calif., June 2 (AP).—California's picturesque and widely-known Governor, James Rolph, jr., 64, died here today.

In the quiet of the Santa Clara Valley ranch home of Walter Linforth, a friend, the chief executive succumbed to a combination of diseases which overcame him several months ago and recently caused him to abandon plans for a reelection campaign.

For days his death had been expected. Early in the week physicians abandoned hope for Rolph. Every time he rallied the succeed-

Dictatorship Hinted in New Cuban Crisis

One Cabinet Member Quits With Others Likely to Follow.

Havana, June 2 (AP).—The possibility of a military dictatorship in Cuba was rumored tonight following the resignation of Emeterio Santo Venia, secretary to the presidency.

Persistent rumors in palace circles maintained that four other high government officials are ready to present their resignations.

Prospects of a cabinet crisis were foreseen. Dissension between military and civil authorities over the newly approved law of public order was said to be the reason for the rift in President Carlos Mendieta's regime.

Santo Venia's resignation was reported as a move against "lessening the power of civil authorities and increasing military jurisdiction."

Under the Cuban constitution the secretary of the presidency is a member of the cabinet. Santo Venia was virtually author of the law on public order which provided methods to speed up legal procedure in trials against terrorists.

It is generally known that the law has been altered to give broader powers to military authorities.

Cabinet members refused tonight to comment on the rumors of further resignations and drastic Government steps leading toward military assumption of power. They did not, however, deny them.

Santo Venia merely confirmed the fact he had resigned. He refused to state his reasons.

Rumors that opposition factions were busily preparing som sort of action against the Government became stronger. Col. Fulgencio Batista, head of the army, who last night ordered Government trooops quartered in the capital to remain in barracks, revealed that he knew several plots were brewing.

"But the army," he said, "is strong and united, with sufficient power to crush any revolution."

Nats and Red Sox Split; Cavalcade, U. S. Netmen Win

Yesterday's sport spotlight focused on baseball, tennis, and horse racing. Locally the Nats took a 2-1 pitching duel from the Red Sox and then played on to lose, 10-7, to the Boston club in the twelfth inning of the second game. At Baltimore the United States Davis Cup team won the final two singles matches to sweep the series with Mexico. At Paris, Helen Jacobs bowed to Peggy Scriven in the final of the French hard-court tournament. At Chicago, Cavalcade, winner of the Kentucky Derby, came with a rush in the stretch to win the $25,000 added American Derby. Philadelphia Police Linked To Rum Ring

Judge's Name Found With 60 Detectives' on Pay Roll.

Philadelphia, June 2 (AP).—A city magistrate and 50 to 60 Philadelphia detectives and policemen were linked by Federal agents today to a huge bootleg alcohol ring, smashed in a series of startling raids.

The agents who broke down the reputed ring, by descending on 11 different establishments yesterday, disclosed they found a "little black pay roll book" in which the names of the magistrate and the police officers were listed. They refused to give out the list.

Many of those listed, the agents said, had been mentioned in telephone conversations to the ring's headquarters, which were overheard by the Government authorities on tapped wires.

These developments were disclosed as Director of Public Safety Theodore F. Wood and members of the Civil Service Commission prepared to press an immediate investigation of the Federal charges involving municipal authorities, and as the Federal grand jury went on apace with its inquiry of liquor conditions, ordered by U. S. District Judge George A. Welsh.

Three arrests were made yesterday, the most important of which is described by Federal authorities as that of Ben Fogel, alleged "brains" of the bootleg band. Taken into custody with him were his sister, Mrs. Minnie Rose, and Norman Cutler, reputed employe of the ring.

Fogel was held in $5,000 bail by a United States commissioner, while the others were placed under bond of $2,500 each as the commissioner was informed by Federal agents that the gang operated trucks in the transportation of alcohol to Philadelphia and points in New Jersey and Delaware.

Meantime, Commander John D. Pennington, head of the Federal bureau combating illicit liquor in this area, declared that liquor license holders are providing an outlet for a tremendous flow of illegal alcohol, exceeding in volume even that of State liquor stores. He said the raids on the ring's headquarters had crippled but not wiped out its operation.

Little Entente Agrees To Recognize Soviet

Geneva, June 2 (U.P.).—A complete agreement for recognition of Soviet Russia by the Little Entente was reached tonight.

The Little Entente nations, Roumania, Jugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, are aligned with France, which herself has been considering an alliance with the Soviets.

84 Striking Drivers Arrested in Brooklyn

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 2 (AP).—Police arrested 84 striking bakery drivers on charges of disorderly conduct today after allegedly destructive picketing at a local bakery.

The arrests were made as strikers began turning over delivery wagons, chasing private police and heckling drivers.

Textile Strike Is Canceled; Probe of Pay, Hours Slated

Walkout for 300,000 Tomorrow Averted by Compromise.

'New Day' Forecast By Union Leader

Johnson, Jubilant, Scoffs at Chance of 33% Wage Raise.

Settlement of the threatened textile strike, due to become effective tomorrow, was announced yesterday by Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson.

Elated over the success of his efforts to prevent 300,000 cotton-mill workers from walking out, Gen. Johnson announced he now would seek a compromise in the brewing steel strike tentatively set for June 16.

Johnson reached a compromise agreement with union spokesmen calling for investigation of wages, hours and working conditions in the industry. The NRA promised to keep a closer check on code violations.

Thomas F. McMahon, diminutive Irishman who championed the workers' cause as president of the United Textile Workers, smiled broadly as he commented the agreement "marks the beginning of a new day for the cotton textile workers."

Will Expose "Evils."

He added the compromise "will result in exposure of evils in the industry and create machinery for an unbiased investigation of conditions."

It was an NRA order for curtailment of production 25 per cent during the summer that precipitated the crisis. Johnson said the order was necessary to curb overproduction. The settlement removed one of the sorest spots in the troubled labor picture.

The negotiations were carried on four days and were marked by a declaration by George A. Sloan, code authority chairman, that the strike, if called, would destroy every benefit gained by the industry under NRA.

Concerning demands of the workers that their wages be raised if production were curtailed, Johnson declared:

"It is clear that no such violent increase as 33 1-3 per cent in all wage scales, if any, can be considered at this time. The rise in the price of cotton textiles has been one of the chief consumer complaints."

Sloan expressed satisfaction with the agreement.

Points of Probe Listed.

Johnson agreed to appoint a representative of the industry as labor adviser to Government members on the Cotton Textile Code Authority. A spokesman for employes also will be named to the NRA Labor Advisory Board. Membership of the Cotton Textiles National Industrial Relations Board will be increased by one representative each of employers and employes.

Another concession won by workers was an agreement for the NRA division of planning and research to investigate:

What productive machine hours are necessary to meet normal de-

Sloop Yankee Defeats New Rainbow in Trial

Newport, R. I., June 2 (AP).—The sloop Yankee, of Boston, showed her stern today to Harold S. Vanderbilt's New Rainbow. It was Yankee's first brush with the yacht she will have to beat to win the right to represent this country in the America's Cup races.

The race was an impromptu one in Narragansett Bay and the first appearance of Yankee in these waters since 1930, when she was an unsuccessful candidate to race Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock V.

$1,178,543,393 Bill for Relief Reported, Starts House Battle; Drought Need Put at Billion

Shipstead Leads Group to Offer Program by Tuesday.

Roosevelt Worried Over Devastation

President and Hopkins Discuss Emergency Over Telephone.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Already regarded as the most severe drought on record in the United States, the heat wave burning its way across the Middle West and imperiling the Nation's breadbasket may necessitate a $1,000,000,000 Federal relief program, it was concluded yesterday by a conference attended by 30 members of House and Senate from 10 of the afflicted States.

Announcement that the Congressional group was thinking in terms of $1,000,000,000 in providing relief for drought sufferers was made by Senator Henrik Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota, designated as chairman of the drought conference, which expects to have a concrete plan ready for presentation to Congress by Tuesday.

Meanwhile President Roosevelt became so concerned over the drought and the potential disaster which may follow in its train that from Worcester, Mass., he telephoned Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, and discussed with him various plans for meeting the situation.

Work Program Framed.

Hopkins subsequently announced that he was having plans drawn for a "work program" in the stricken area, to be made effective at once. Hopkins said the purpose of the program would be to conserve water and food and to provide cash for families left destitute by the withering weather.

President Roosevelt on his return to the city Monday will call into conference all the various officials dealing with human, agricultural and other forms of relief, to survey the situation and determine on a course of action. In Administration circles it is now conceded that $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 at least will be needed for relief in the drought area.

Hopkins, on May 16, told the House Ways and Means Committee, in explaining his plans for the expenditure of relief funds contained in the urgent deficiency bill, that he had allocated $50,000,000 for drought relief between July 1 and March 1, 1935.

But that was before the present drought reached its present critical proportions. In announcing his "work program" for the drought regions Hopkins made an initial al-

G. O. P. Post Does Not Interest Meyer

Spikes Suggestion Made by Robert Lucas.

When Eugene Meyer, who is spending the week-end at Mount Kisco, N. Y., was informed of the published statement of Robert H. Lucas, former executive director of the Republican National Committee, suggesting him for the chairmanship of the Republican National Committee, he authorized the following statement:

"I am not interested in politics of any kind as such and I propose to continue to publish The Washington Post, as I have tried to do during the last year, as an absolutely independent newspaper devoted to the public interest entirely regardless of partisan politics."

Lincoln-Corrected Biography Blasts Spurious Life Stories

Springfield, Ill., June 2 (AP).—A copy of the William Dean Howells biography of Abraham Lincoln, written in 1860, with many pencilled corrections in the margins made by Lincoln himself, has been discovered.

Benjamin P. Thomas, executive secretary of the Abraham Lincoln Association, told today of the biography in the association's June bulletin.

The book belongs to Samuel C. Parks, jr., of Cody, Wyo., whose father, a Logan County, Ill., lawyer, rode the circuit with Lincoln.

Thomas said Lincoln's corrections deny several stories which have often been accepted as true.

Howells told that when Lincoln enlisted in the Black Hawk war the men voted for captain by lining up behind the candidate of their choice. He said three-fourths of the men immediately lined up behind Lincoln. When others saw how the voting was going, they deserted the other candidate—a wealthy man for whom Lincoln once had worked.

The rival candidate, Howells had stated, was a harsh and exacting employer, and had treated Lincoln, "whom everybody else loved and esteemed, with the greatest of rigor."

Lincoln crossed out the quoted passage and wrote at the bottom of the page: "William Kirkpatrick—I never worked for him—L."

On antoeher page Howells asserts that, as a member of the Illinois Legislature, "Lincoln used to perform his journeys between New Salem and the seat of government on foot, though the remaining eight of the Long Nine (the Sangamon County delegation) traveled on horseback."

Lincoln crossed this out and wrote: "No harm, if true; but, in fact, not true."

Howells gave Lincoln's mother's name as "Lucy," which Lincoln crossed out and wrote "Nancy" in the margin.

Bailey Warns Nation Must Halt Movement Toward Radicalism

Says Emergency Steps Could Lead Way to Disaster.

SENATOR JOSIAH W. BAILEY.

"The historic character of this Republic must be preserved," said Senator Josiah W. Bailey, Democrat, of North Carolina, in an interview yesterday for The Washington Post.

"Nothing has happened to justify socialistic or communistic doctrines in this country. Private enterprise must be permitted to resume its functioning. There is no alternative. That is the only course open to me.

"I shall resist every step toward radical change in the basic character of the Nation. I am emphatically opposed to having the Government compete with private business. It is important that the American people should make a sharp disinction between emergency and permanent measures.

"Some 15 or more major legislative acts of the Administration are specified in their preambles to be of emergency character. They do not represent permanent policy. Their purpose is to put the country back on its feet. I do not regard these enactments as socialistic but to meet temporary exigency. I believe that is the President's conception.

"The people of the country, and of my State, have been enthusiastic for the President because they believe he is fighting it out on this line. We must seek every means for getting back to old and tested principles of American liberty. I believe that when we have finished

Bookies Face Finish Line in Race Betting

News Service Which Gave Running Accounts and Results to Suspend.

Bookmaking establishments in the District were dealt almost a mortal blow yesterday when word went "down the line" that effective tomorrow the news agency that has been supplying running accounts of the doings at all race tracks would suspend its service.

Heretofore patrons of gaming places have been able to recline at leisure in their favorite spot and suffer all the agonies—or joys—of attending the races.

So accurate and so fast has been the service supplied here that bettors were frequently able to cash in tickets within a few minutes after the finish of the races. They have been kept posted on such details as post positions, closing odds, jockeys, shifts in weights and other details.

Phone Company Acts.

With such a service at his disposal, the bettor could take advantage of the shifting of his fortunes and could attempt the proverbial last minute recoupment.

United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett said that it was his understanding that when the telephone company threatened to withdraw its facilities from the news agency, the latter agreed to relinquish the service.

He denied that a "deal" had been made whereby, in return for recommendations of leniency in criminal proceedings against four men arrested when police raided the agency several weeks ago, the company had agreed to cease its business in the District.

Will Push Jury Action.

"We will go right ahead with our investigation of the news agency," he said. At present the matter is in the hands of the grand jury, where Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb is directing the matter.

Persons popularly suspected of being gambling operators last night admitted that they had apparently run up against an insurmountable obstacle. One, questioned at his place of business, said that he would be forced to rely upon information obtained from newspapers or the racing papers.

There is a possibility that facilities will be established in either nearby Maryland or Virginia. In such a way, the racing information previously sent to about 65 places here could be made available for institutions that specialize in the idiosyncrasies of the ponies.

Girl Bandit, 19, Escapes Custody for Third Time

Medfield, Mass., June 2 (AP).—Helen Orzolek, 19, the first girl ever convicted of banditry in this State, made her third escape within six months early today when she fled from the Medfield State Hospital.

Previously the auburn-haired girl, who was sentenced nearly two years ago for holding up auto parking parties in Springfield, had made two escapes from the reformatory for women at Sherborn.

Roosevelt Hit In Fiery Talk On Nepotism

Garner, Rainey, Leaders in Both Parties Flayed for Giving Jobs to Kin.

Charges of nepotism were made against President Roosevelt, Vice President Garner, Speaker Rainey and other leaders in both parties by Representative John R. Mitchell (Democrat), Tennessee, yesterday.

He read part of his remarks on the House floor and inserted the remainder in the Congressional Record, one of the few times a member in Congress has brought up this subject face to face with the membership.

"The President of the United States and the Speakers of the House and the Senate each are guilty of this practice before the country and taxpayers of America today," he said. "The more prominent the offender, the greater the wrong in the public eye."

Hits at Jobs for Kin.

Representative Mitchell was speaking in behalf of his bill to prevent Senators and Representatives from employing relatives as secretaries and clerks.

He said Vice President Garner and Speaker Rainey have their wives employed as clerks, but did not elaborate his reference to President Roosevelt. Col. Henry Roosevelt, a cousin of the President, is Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Warren Delano Robbins, another cousin, is Minister to Canada, and an uncle, Frederic A. Delano, is chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Representative Mitchell said that some 65 members of the House have relatives on the pay roll. He said that 37 Senators practiced nepotism in the last session of Congress.

Called Pay-Roll Padding.

He said that with millions out of work "this is no time or place to pad the family pay roll."

"Not only Congress but the departments of the Government are filled with those guilty of nepotism," Representative Mitchell said. "Many underpaid clerks are forced to do the work of some wife or daughter, or son of a member, who receives most of the pay, and the clerk who does the real work gets a starvation wage. Shame on a

Shipping Strike Violence Flares

One Longshoreman Is Shot in Texas Battle.

Houston, Tex., June 2 (AP).—Approximately 100 shots were fired and a white member of the International Longshoremen's Association was wounded critically today when a group of white and colored strikers menaced colored men gathered in a house near the docks. W. Alvie Swan, 29-year-old striker, was shot twice in the back.

The colored men are employed by the Carnegie Steel Co. They said they were not longshoremen and had not been loading or unloading ships.

Republicans Charge It Permits $7,000,000,000 Expenditures.

Called Tomorrow Under "Gag" Rule

President Given Right to Take RFC and PWA Cash Balances.

By Robert C. Albright.

Plunging the chamber into a maelstrom of controversy, the House Appropriations Committee yesterday rounded out the Administration's emergency budget plans by reporting a $1,178,543,393 bill for relief and extension of public works.

Republicans immediately challenged the report, charging it concealed potential authorizations for relief expenditures running to between $6,000,000,000 and $7,000,000,000, and with no check on the President's authority to dip into RFC coffers.

The bill will be called up in the House tomorrow under a rules suspension permitting only 40 minutes debate and denying to members the right of amendment.

Fund Diversion Permitted.

A battle of statements over the exact total of the bill was provoked by specific provision that "any savings or unobligated balances" of the RFC, or unobligated PWA funds, may be diverted by the President for emergency relief.

Chairman James P. Buchanan of the Appropriations Committee insisted that not more than $500,000,000 over and above the total of the bill would need to be transferred from the RFC under the program contemplated.

In other Administration quarters it was argued that not more than $500,000,000 in unobligated RFC funds and $250,000,000 in PWA balances would be available this fall.

But Representative John Taber, of New York, Republican member of the Appropriations Committee, charged flatly that more than $7,000,000,000 might conceivably be spent under the bill.

Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio, another minority committee member, backed him up.

"The reason this thing is being handled by the RFC is so the people won't understand what is being done, so they can conceal what is in this bill."

The bill reported yesterday definitely limited to $500,000,000 the $500,000 Fire Hits Oil Field

Blaze Follows Explosion of Gasoline Tank; Workers Safe.

Huntington Beach, Calif., June 2 (AP).—Fire which followed an earth-jarring explosion of a gasoline storage tank in the oil field here today destroyed everything within an area two blocks square and caused damage unofficially estimated at $500,000.

Police and firemen reported there were no casualties, although the lives of some 25 persons at first were believed to have been endangered.

Firemen said 12 or more gasoline and oil storage tanks and six or seven derricks were ruined.

Using chemicals almost entirely, firemen finally confined the blaze to the area immediately adjacent to the explosion scene. Heat was so intense, however, that the area could not be surveyed until several hours later.

G. O. P. Parley Tuesday Picks New Chairman

Leaders Off to Chicago, Anxious to Start Comeback.

By Raymond Clapper.

Striving to put itself in shape to make a come-back, the Republican party leadership was bound for Chicago today to select a new National chairman.

Indications last night were that members of the National committee were far from an agreement as to who the new party leader should be and that the question would have to be threshed out at Chicago. A number of party bigwigs expect to reach Chicago tomorrow for informal conferences in advance of the committee meeting Tuesday, when the resignation of Chairman Everett Sanders will come up.

Many Republicans attach significance to the impending choice, believing it will go far toward shaping the course of the party in the fall campaign and in the build-up for the 1936 Presidential race. Others, however, say that the party chairman is essentially an organization officer whose concern is with party machinery rather than with policies. In the past much has depended upon the inclination of the chairman himself. Some have been silent men who devoted themselves to backstage organizing, while others have regarded themselves as party mouthpieces.

Costly Position.

General sentiment favors a Middle Western man, a younger Republican, one not reactionary yet strongly against the trend of Democratic policy.

While not an essential, it is regarded as better if he has ample financial means. The chairmanship is said to have cost one incumbent since the war about $100,000 a year. Maintenance of a Washington residence with a great amount of entertaining and other items not eligible for the expense account, plus the fact that the job carries no salary, makes the post a difficult one for a man who must earn his living as he goes along.

A score of men have been mentioned for the chairmanship. Those most prominent in the discussion on the eve of the committee meeting are John D. M. Hamilton, lawyer, Kansas committeeman; Walter S. Hallahan, business man and West Virginia committeeman; former Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana; former Ambassador Henry P. Fletcher, of Pennsylvania; former Senator Walter E. Edge, of New Jersey; former Gov. Walter J. Kohler, of Wisconsin; Col. Theodore Roosevelt, of New York; Harrison E. Spangler, Iowa committeeman. The choice may go to a dark horse who has not even been mentioned.

Anxious to Heal Breach.

Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, and Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio, cochairmen of the joint Congressional campaign committee, expect to attend the Chicago meeting with a view to arranging with the new National chairman for close cooperation through the coming campaign. Feeling between cochairmen and the retiring National chairman, Sanders, has been cool. When the joint Congressional committee was set up, the two chairmen issued a statement announcing that the National committee would have no part in the Congressional campaign. Desire of party leaders to heal this breach between the two important party committees, plus ill-health, hastened the resignation of Sanders. A definite move to force him out brought the issue to a head.

Senator Hastings, in a statement last night, took issue with President Roosevelt and Gen. Johnson, who last week ascribed criticism of the Administration to political motives.

Blames Democrats.

"The astounding fact is," Senator Hastings said, "that Democrats have led in the barrage of fault-finding, or, as Gen. Johnson terms it, 'sleazy deception.'

"At least two Democrats, who aspired to the Presidency via the Democratic party, and others who have been prominent in party affairs and party office have ranted against the un-Democratic Roosevelt program. There was Al Smith and John W. Davis. So far as is known, they seek no office this coming November.

"There is Owen D. Young and Newton D. Baker. Then there are the unregimented Senators Glass and Byrd, of Virginia. It must cause a gnashing of teeth in the Administration when the Democratic Senators from the leading Democratic State, the State of Washington and Jefferson, walk out on them. Senators Smith, of South Carolina; Bailey, of North Carolina; Logan, of Kentucky; Gore, of Oklahoma, and Tydings, of Maryland, the Free State—they also have been critical and they are Democrats.

"In the House, Representative Terrell, of Texas, became so disgusted that he has refused to run again, saying, in effect, that he would rather stay at home as a citizen of the Lone Star State, where they still believe in the American system of Government.

"There are others, but this impressive list should suffice. What prominent old-line Democrat is there, with the exception of Congressional leaders, who is not opposed to the attempted sovietizing of America?

"After 12 years of giving criticism, it appears that some Democrats 'can't take it.'"

Secretary of State Hull Attends Chicago Exhibit

Chicago, June 2 (AP).—Secretary of State Cordell Hull took the day off from treaties and diplomatic worries today and visited the 1934 showing of A Century of Progress.

He was the first high Government official who had come to the fair this year. The exposition's private army—the Sixty-first Field Artillery, in private life—shined up its guns to bang out a formal salute of 19 guns when he arrived at the main fair gate.

Thousands Shout 'Yes' as Duce Asks 'Are You Ready for War?'

Rome, June 2 (AP).—Premier Mussolini made a fighting talk today before 10,000 war volunteers, and was given an enthusiastic shout of affirmation when he asked if they are ready to fight again if necessary.

He promised them, though, that if they do fight, it will be for Italy alone and not on behalf of other nations pretending to be allies.

"Italy's volunteers," he said, "if war is necessary, will shed their blood for Italy alone. Experience has shown them that it does not pay to help by land and sea the people who pretend to be our allies."

France, he declared, did not give to Italy the colonial territory promised in the treaty of London in 1915, which opened the way for Italy to enter the World War.

His reference to allies also was taken to include Serbia, now a part of Yugoslavia.

"Do you feel that tomorrow, if it is necessary to fight, that victory will embrace our flag?" he asked after the volunteers had declared they are ready to fight again if necessary.

The answer was another enthusiastic "yes."

Italy, the premier declared, would have continued her foreign policy of collaboration with all peoples, but because it is not mathematically certain that other nations will collaborate, it is necessary to be prepared.

"Not only are times hard," Il Duce continued, turning to the economic situation, "but I also want to add that you must not hope for easier times to come.

"We must accept hard times. That is why the people are offering today a superb spectacle of discipline."

Chief Executive To Decide Fate Of Housing Bill

Rule Waited on Whether to Seek Passage This Session.

(Associated Press.)

President Roosevelt will decide after his return to the Capitol tomorrow whether to press the Administration housing bill for passage at this session or let it go over until the next Congress.

Chairman Steagall, of the House Banking Committee, yesterday indicated he was awaiting word from the President. "We will know next week whether the housing bill is to pass this session," he said.

The Chief Executive has indicated he favored the program drawn to stimulate the lagging construction industries by helping to finance home renovation and home building.

Leaders at the Capitol feel, however, he would be willing to see the bill laid aside or drastically amended if it threatened to delay adjournment.

Steagall's committee has been holding sessions on the housing bill for several days, but additional consideration is planned, and the chairman has indicated extensive revision is in prospect.

The proposal is also before the Senate Banking Committee, and yesterday a sub-committee, headed by Senator Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, virtually completed work on the section which would guarantee 20 per cent of loans to modernize and repair homes.

Bulkley said his committee would vote tomorrow on a proposal to place the renovation program under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, instead of establishing a new commission to handle the loans.

Other sections of the bill will be taken up tomorrow, Bulkley said.

practice of this kind. It is graft of the rankest kind. Millions are still unemployed, hungry and walking the streets and highways, while Congressmen pad their own salaries by the practice of nepotism and take the allowance provided by them to themselves for clerk hire and put it in their pockets or send their children to school on the proceeds or the wife enters so-called society in the Nation's Capital and entertains at the expense of the people back home. No wonder Congress has suffered in the estimation of the people."

Assails Free Shaves.

Representative Mitchell said that Senators force the taxpayers to pay for their shaves and haircuts, "their marble baths with professional rubbers, a pool of filtered water, violet ray lamps, rowing and weighing machines, also many different kinds of mineral waters and free garage service."

"The Democratic leader in the Senate formerly had three out of five secretaries close relatives—one a brother-in-law, who lived in Little Rock, Ark., and drew a salary of $2,200 a year while was president at the time of the Southwest Joint Stock Land Bank," Representative Mitchell continued. "During the Hoover Administration, Senator Townsend, of Delaware, was president of a construction company which did $200,000 worth of work for the Government. At the same time, his son was vice president of this company and secretary to his father's Senate committee which passed on Senatorial expenditures. The son drew $3,900 a year."

Representative Mitchell said that former Senator Brookhart (Republican), Iowa, had several relatives in Federal jobs while he was in the Senate and that he was now holding a Federal appointment. He also named Senator Dickinson (Republican), Iowa, and Senator Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, as having had relatives on the payroll, and added that many others equally prominent could be mentioned if time permitted.

NRA Gives Up, Circuses Go Without a Code

Johnson Agrees There's No Way to Crack Down on 'Em.

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who has proudly cracked down on the biggest industries in the country, gave up yesterday and admitted there wasn't any use trying to put circuses under the NRA.

Carnivals, too, are going to operate on the same free and easy lines as has been traditional under the big top.

It seems that the circus question brought up all sorts of problems for the NRA. One was where to draw the line between carnivals and circuses. Carnivals have a way, the NRA discovered, of growing up into circuses. And circuses are apt to run into bad weather and dwindle into carnivals.

The subject of fair trade practices was enough to send a code expert to a sanitarium. Suppose one outfit ballyhooed the fattest lady in the world and a rival show claimed its lady was the fattest.

The NRA would have to step in, weigh the ladies and decide which lady was fattest and which was making an unfair representation.

The small-boy problem also was insurmountable. Small boys have a way of swarming over circus lots as soon as the show hits town and carrying water to elephants, helping with the tents. Under a code it would be up to the NRA to outlaw such activities as child labor and see to it that the rule was enforced.

All in all, the NRA decided, maybe it was better to let well enough alone.

Today the Recovery Administration announced that code negotiations had been suspended "in line with the policy of concentrating on larger industries."

Poisoned Gum Mystery Investigated by Police

Sacramento, Calif., June 2 (AP).—Sacramento police sought to determine today whether four sticks of poisoned gum Mrs. Georgia McKenzie said she found on the porch of her home here were the fruits of a hoax, or a plan to kill members of her family.

Mrs. McKenzie told the police she found the gum wrapped in envelopes on which was typed the word "sample." She became suspicious when the gum burned her tongue and had it analyzed.

Florida City Sued; Defalcation Charged

Miami, Fla., June 2 (AP).—Damages of $20,000 are asked in a suit filed in Federal Court today against the city of Lake Worth by L. P. Chalmers, of New York. He charged the city has defaulted on payments of ten of its improvement bonds of an October 1, 1926, issue.

The bonds are of $1,000 value each.

U. S. Adopts Waiting Policy on War Debts

The European debt situation yesterday gave promise of taking an early place alongside the disarmament discussion as an issue which many governments talk about and do nothing.

As the smoke and the fuss cleared from the furore kicked up in Europe over President Roosevelt's debt message to Congress, one fact stood out clearly. None of the 13 debtor governments is actually doing anything about the instalments, totaling $175,000,000, which fall due on June 15.

State Department officials shrugged skeptical shoulders at various reports from Europe that this or that government was making plans to make a "token" payment on that date, or that an understanding had been arrived at between one of the debtor governments and President Roosevelt concerning the June 15 payment.

Acting Secretary of State William Phillips said he knew of no such understanding, or plans. He specifically denied a published report from London that the British government had reached an understanding with President Roosevelt.

In general, the State Department adopted a "wait and see" policy. It is recognized in all Administration circles that there is practically nothing this Government can do to force payment of the debts.

Except for a brief visit by the Polish Ambassador, the State Department corridors were strangers to diplomatic representatives yesterday. Phillips, who conferred with the Ambassador, said his visit had nothing to do with the Polish debt and intimated the subject had not been mentioned.

French Cabinet Meets Tuesday to Argue Issue

Paris, June 2 (U.P.).—The French cabinet will meet on Tuesday for a bitter debate on whether to default finally and irrevocably on the war debt to the United States, or to make a token payment and seek revision.

A United Press survey showed the ministry about evenly divided. Edouard Herriot, minister without portfolio, who resigned in December of 1932 in protest against the French default, has rallied several important cabinet members behind his slogan of "the necessity of observing the sanctity of France's signature."

His supporters include Louis Barthou, Louis Germain-Martin, Francois Pietri and possibly Premier Gaston Doumergue himself. On the other side, Pierre Laval and Andre Tardieu lead a bloc which insists that while France does not deny the debt, the Hoover moratorium interrupted payment of both debts and reparations, making it impossible for France to pay the United States when she is receiving nothing from Germany.

The issue was in doubt. Members of the cabinet, after studying President Roosevelt's debt message to Congress, said it contained nothing new on which the government could hope to sway Parliament from its insistence on paying nothing.

"Solution of the debt problem has not been advanced a single step," a spokesman for the foreign office said.

City Debates Municipal Gasoline Trade Venture

Nashville, Tenn., June 2 (AP).—The city of Trenton, Tenn., is considering going into the filling station business.

Dancey Fort, State commissioner of finance and taxation, received a letter today from Mayor W. W. Landrum, who said the city was contemplating selling gasoline at a "reasonable price" and asked if a municipality could purchase the fuel without payment of the 7-cent State gallonage tax.

The division of planning and research to cooperate with the Industrial Relations Board in completing its studies of the work load for use of the board in dealing with controversies over the stretch-out system under which operators handle an unusually large number of machines without additional pay.

A comely, blue-eyed woman, Miss Elizabeth Nord, a union organizer, figured prominently in the final conference. She acted as a liaison officer between McMahon and other union leaders, including Francis J. Gorman, William F. Kelly, Horace A. Riviere, John Peel and Abram Binns.

Nerves were frayed during the four days of negotiations, which often lasted until late at night. Johnson walked out of a meeting Friday night, obviously irritated. He returned refreshed yesterday and engineered the compromise.

McMahon canceled the strike order in telegrams to local officials in New England, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama. He emphasized, however, that he had not sacrificed his right to call another walkout later should conditions warrant.

Meanwhile, the Petroleum Labor Policy Board wired St. Louis gasoline filling station workers a vigorous rebuke for striking despite an agreement in February with eight major oil companies.

A message from W. M. Leiserson, board chairman, to Gasoline Service Station and Warehouse Employes Union, No. 18362, read:

"Regret hasty strike action before procedure prescribed in your agreement was followed. Understood from your President Bell's letter of May 31 that matters you and company could not agree on would be referred to this board for conciliation as stipulated in agreement.

"Feel certain that wages and other matters in dispute can be adjusted peacefully by following procedure of agreement. Hope you will urge your members to do this."

Hole in Wall, 10 Escape Jail

Leave Tulsa Prison via Jury Quarters With No Interference.

Tulsa, Okla., June 2 (AP).—Ten prisoners escaped from the Tulsa County Jail this morning by crawling through a hole in a wall which jail officials said they "thought had been repaired."

The ten, including two robbery suspects, entered a jury room and walked out of the building without interference.

Those who escaped were Dennis Logsdon, 34; Jerry Schrader, 19; Vincent Stanley, 18; Joe Walters, 26; Carl Wells, 20; Bill Johnson, 19; Joe Lockwood, 20; Tom Hollis, 20; John Chase, 18, and Omer Bridges, 38.

Logsdon and Schrader were charged with robbery; Wells was under two-year sentence for forgery; Johnson also was an alleged forger; Lockwood was held for auto theft and the rest were burglar suspects.

The escape occurred about 8 a. m., but was not discovered immediately.

City and county officers began searching suspected hideaways of the fugitives.

Street to Revise Relief Accounting

Committee to Coordinate Systems Named.

Elwood Street, new director of Public Welfare, yesterday named a committee to consolidate and coordinate the accounting systems of all relief activities of the District.

Named to the committee were William C. Cleary, general manager of work relief; A. R. Pilkerton, from the District Auditor's office; Otto J. Cass, emergency relief business manager; Carlin Dewey, of the work relief set-up, and Bernard Cain.

The committee was named after Street, Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor; Cleary and Cass made a survey yesterday of the various accounting systems in the relief organization.

Hobson Made Rear Admiral

Hero of Spanish-American War Honored After 36 Years.

On the thirty-sixth anniversary of the sinking of the Merrimac by Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson in Cuban waters, to block the Spanish fleet's escape, Congress yesterday voted him recognition by elevating him to the rank of rear admiral, with retired pay of $4,500 annually, according to the Associated Press.

Congressional action was completed by unanimous House approval of a Senate bill, which now goes to the White House for President Roosevelt's signature.

The aged Spanish-American War hero, who has received no recognition from the Government since his resignation from the Navy 30 years ago, because of ill-health, walked into the House galleries shortly after passage of the measure.

Chairman Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, of the Naval Committee, in charge of the bill, led the House in a standing ovation to Hobson.

Representative Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, who a number of years ago defeated Hobson for Congress from Alabama, was among the members who paid tribute.

U. S. Road Cash Aids 173,754

Highway Projects Involve 90% of 400 Million PWA Funds.

At the end of May, 173,754 men were employed on Federal-aid highway jobs, most of which were financed by the Public Works Administration, Secretary of the Interior Ickes said yesterday.

Work under way or completed on roads involves 90 per cent of the total $400,000,000 PWA highway allotment, the Secretary reported. Declaring that employment has risen to new highs through the road work, the Secretary said that in addition to the 173,754 men employed directly, thousands were finding work in industrial plants benefiting from highway contracts.

The road work advertised for contract, including force account jobs, represented $354,681,000 at the end of May, the report said. There were 4,991 projects under construction involving $264,695,000 in PWA funds and 1,515 projects involving $43,023,000 completed.

The report showed 7,836 projects, estimated to cost $383,460,000 had been advertised for contract, begun by day labor employed directly by State highway authorities, or completed.

President Pays Tribute to His Groton Mentor

Alumni Dinner Talk Lauds Peabody, School Founder 50 Years Ago.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Groton, Mass., June 2.—President Roosevelt came back to his old school today to help celebrate the fiftieth birthday of its founding. As a former star third baseman, he watched a baseball game between two Groton teams. And then, as a loyal alumnus of the class of 1900, he paid high compliment to its founder, the Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, at an anniversary dinner.

The influence of Dr. Peabody, the same kindly disciplinarian who still rules Groton's cloistered precincts, and Mrs. Peabody "means more to me than that of any other people next to my father and mother," the President declared.

His remarks were made at the closing celebration in the school dining hall, following athletic contests during the afternoon, which the President witnessed with several hundred other parents.

Mr. Roosevelt motored over yesterday from his special train at Worcester to see the graduation of his young son, John. He returned with Mrs. Roosevelt this morning and again vanished within the school's brick portals.

All Outsiders Barred.

It was Dr. Peabody's injunction that none not connected with Groton should enter these gates and State troopers were there to see that his wishes were carried out. No exception was made for the President—if, indeed, he wanted it—by his old headmaster.

The President's remarks were the highlight of the school celebration, which throughout had paid scant notice of his status as Chief Executive of the Nation. Since correspondents were not admitted, the only report of his speech available was a slim press release giving extracts.

The report said Mr. Roosevelt, as one of a number of old graduates on the program, spoke principally in reminiscent vein of the history of the school. The President was quoted as saying:

Kept "Finest Traditions."

"As long as I live, the influence of Dr. and Mrs. Peabody means and will mean more to me than that of any other people next to my father and mother."

The President said that the rector over the half-century "had successfully kept the finest traditions of the older methods of education" and yet had been ever ready to adjust the school's curriculum in accordance with "the newer conceptions of social responsibilities and social needs."

The President further was reported to have emphasized that education is never finished, and that the best any school can hope to attain is "to send out its scholars ready to grasp the opportunities which come to them and to adapt themselves to the changes of a changing world."

"The life and life work of the rector," said the President, "point to the fact that there are richer rewards to be achieved through contacts with people and living up to personal standards than can be achieved through any material success. I pay my tribute today a a man who so long ago pointed the way to us all as to the real meaning of success."

After the alumni dinner and many hours of reminiscences with other "old grads," the President hastened back to Worcester, where his train has remained in a siding since early yesterday. At midnight he was to leave for Hyde Park, where he plans to spend Sunday, then returning to the Capital.

Indian's Heirs Fight for Body

'Widow' Defies U. S. Order for Oklahoma Burial; Estate Tangled.

Muskogee, Okla., June 2 (AP).—Family tree charts of the Jackson Barnett lineage are springing up like ivy since the "world's richest Indian" died early this week in his mansion at Los Angeles, forecasting a many-sided fight for the estate which has an estimated value of between $1,500,000 and $4,000,000.

Meanwhile, Oklahoma heirs and Mrs. Anna Laura Lowe Barnett, former wife of the rich Creek, are locked in a dispute over where he will be buried. Despite an order from the Federal Indian Department for removal of the body to Muskogee, Mrs. Barnett, whose marriage to the incompetent Jackson was annulled by the Federal court, instructed a Los Angeles mortuary not to release it until a court order is served, and the mortuary complied.

Furthermore, Mrs. Barnett, who will seek a widow's share of the estate despite the annulment, planned to seek an injunction from California courts to keep the body in that State. Equally as determined, the Indian heirs want it buried here.

Nation Must Halt Movement To Radicalism, Bailey Warns

with the depression this country will have retained its historic character."

Senator Bailey, now 60, lawyer, former member of the North Carolina State Board of Agriculture, belongs in the growing ranks of prominent Democratic Senators who, like Senators Glass and Byrd of Virginia, and Tydings of Maryland—interviews with whom have appeared in The Post in recent weeks—strongly object to "regimentation," to continued Governmental pre-empting of the field of private enterprise, and call for the earliest possible reversion to what Bailey terms the "historic character of the Republic."

The North Carolina Senator has "gone along" with the Administration whenever he felt his support was consistent with meeting emergency. But he differentiates between temporary and permanent measures, and believes the time has come for the Government, if it is to preserve its credit, to clear the way for resumption of normal private activity.

Cites Goals

"We should consolidate our position," he said. "We are getting out of the woods. In order that private enterprise may resume we must have in mind as the immediate goals, a balanced budget, tax reduction, reliance upon bank credit and not upon currency inflation, and individual enterprise. All these people who are striving for revolutionary changes are doing immeasurable harm to the country. This is not a revolution. We have invoked certain extraordinary measures for a limited time only.

"I think the President has been fighting ably and adroitly against a bad situation. The country is incomparably better off than when he took charge. He has restored the Nation's morale. It is all important that the confidence which has been restored is preserved.

"Doubtless there are those in the Government who look for permanence in some of the emergency measures. I do not believe that to be the President's purpose. He is to be congratulated for having avoided a disastrous currency inflation. It is imperative that we adhere now to sound and tried principles. The British speak of muddling through. England does not muddle through. She goes through by the knowledge gained from long experience and evolution. Similarly, America lives and grows. We do not choose. We did not choose to make this a great industrial nation. It became one. The people of this country are not going to choose between Nationalism, internationalism or other 'isms. They are going to go on as they have gone on for a century and a half guided by the same principles and traditions.

Predicts Progress.

"The trouble with the United States is not that we are old an effete, but comparatively young and inexperienced. We have enormous resources, a world of unoccupied land and undeveloped possibilities. We are going ahead in the future, as we have in the past. The American people do not propose to change the character of the Republic."

Senator Bailey is tolerant of much emergency legislation only because he is confident that it is temporary. He holds that it is the particular responsibility of Democratic leaders to resist steps toward permanent departure from established tradition. He has no faith in currency manipulations, and is as vigorously opposed as Senators Byrd and Glass to such experimental policies as those of the agricultural adjustment administration.

Likewise he doubts the omniscence of some of the so-called Young Liberals or Brain Trusters who are the authors of this and other allegedly emergency legislation. He directed a heavy attack against the AAA legislation, when it was pending, and against one of its chief authors, Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture and inventor of logarithmic charts, to predict the price of hogs.

In a Senate speech, which he cited again as echoing the views he holds with increasing conviction, Senator Bailey said:

"It was Joshua, the great captain of the conquest of the Promised Land, who made the sun to stand still on Gibeon and the moon to pause in the vale of Ajalon, but it is not in the power of Ezekiel. No modern and no ancient Ezekiel could arrest the tide of time, and he might just as well have ordered in the bill which has been prepared for us that this old world should reverse her course and turn backward 365 days in the year on her axis from the East to the West, and then reverse her course upon her great orbit and go the other way for 20 years.

Hits Processing Tax.

"We may apply logarithms to hogs and the formulas of calculus to wheat, but we can not restore the status quo between consumers and producers in our land as of 20 years ago.

"Something has been said about relative prices. I am here to say that while Prof. Einstein has made something of a contribution by way of the theory of relativity in the vast universe which surrounds us, I do not understand that the Einstein theory of relativity can be applied to a great population or to the hogs and the wheat and the corn and the cotton which they produce from year to year. Yet nothing less than that is solemnly proposed in this bill.

"It is as if we should undertake to get from the Arabian Nights and Bagdad a magic carpet, and undertake to sail back and find ourselves not moving from place to place but from one era to another, from one set of conditions back to another."

As further reflection of his opinion of legislative experiments such as the AAA, he cited:

"I undertake to say that the processing tax and the price-fixing theory are the most veritable concoction of legislative confusion and ineffectiveness, the most veritable composition of political and economic poison, the most far-fetched and far-reaching vagaries that ever gave promise of passage by Congress.

Attack on Price-Fixing.

"It never occurred to me that I would live to see the day when it would be coolly proposed anywhere in America that we should so far forget the liberties which we received from our fathers and which are guaranteed in the Constitution as to undertake to fix a price by actual law anywhere in this land. When we fix it by taxation we fix it just as much as if we did it by imperial decree from a throne.

"It never occurred to me that it would be proposed in this Congress that we should make it a crime to pay less than the price fixed by a Secretary or the Congress or the President. We have tried to mollify that damnable proposition by making the $1,000 penalty recoverable in a civil suit. I do not know that there is any great difference. The penalty is a penalty and the effect is to destroy liberty in America.

"I said something about the preservaton of the republic. She is not going by way of arms. I am not afraid of that. She is not going by sedition and conspiracy. This republic will go when American liberty goes, in every step we take, giving way here and giving way there, negativing personal liberty or the right of personal security almost unawares—here and here, forgetting the great traditions of the past that ought to guide us, forgetting the great standards by means of which the republic has ever lived and must live, forgetting the spiritual foundations that have made her the source of light and life for 144 years. When we forget, when we cease to exercise eternal vigilance, we begin to see the republic taking a transformation and losing a character which amounts to more than a revolution."

And he added:

"This Union has four great bonds. One is the Constitution, one is the Federal courts, one is the banking and currency system, and the other is freedom of commerce between the States. Whenever any one of these bonds is impaired, we are striking a blow at the bonds of the Union. We think it is well intrenched, we think it will last forever, but empires and republics do not fall by force; they fall by disintegration, and they die in the hands of men who do not know they are dying. Their destroyer is not the assassin, not the deliberate man with a stiletto who strikes in the night, but the man who does not think on the meaning of his acts or the import of the legislation which he espouses. That is the way it happens. Starvation will not kill us, but forgetfulness will destroy us."

U. S. Aids Favor Plan of London Naval Meeting

Time and Place of Parley to Be Decided at Talks Between 5 Powers.

(Associated Press.)

American diplomatic and naval chiefs have placed an unofficial "O. K." on proposals to hold the 1935 general naval conference in London.

Robert Worth Bingham, American Ambassador to London, who will carry on the preliminary bilateral discussions for the United States, had instructions yesterday to interpose no objections if the British government extends an invitation.

The time and place for the conference will be decided at preliminary talks, beginning next week between envoys of the five interested sea powers.

Tonnage Big Problem.

Authorities here—as in London and Tokyo—are known to be deep in mathematical calculations concerning British and Japanese tonnages in the different categories of vessels.

Although there was distinct declination to comment it was known that naval chiefs scanned reports of the launching yesterday of the new Japanese cruiser Mikuma. The event centered interest in Japan's expected request for revision of present ratios to make it possible to construct a number of heavily armed, fast cruisers.

Latest official naval figures show that Japan now has 21 "B" type cruisers carrying guns of six inches or less, totaling more than 100,000 tons, on the water. Two more are under construction, and three more have been appropriated for. Japan thus will have 26 "B" cruisers of 144,375 tons.

U. S. Has Only Ten.

The United States has only 10 "B" class cruisers of 70,500 tons, 4 of 10,000 tons each under construction, and 3 of 10,000 tons each appropriated for, giving a total of 17 ships of 140,500 tons.

Great Britain has 32 "B" class cruisers of 159,070 tons, seven of 43,600 tons building, and six appropriated for, which will give the British navy 45 light cruisers of 252,870 tons.

Iceland Is Shaken By Violent Quake

Forstall, in charge of the instrument, said he was unable to determine immediately in what direction the earthquake was located or how far it was from Denver.

Sailors' Verve In N. Y. Parade Amazes Army

Sailors, Marines Astonish With Precision in N. Y. March.

New York, June 2 (AP).—Sailors and marines of the Navy's fighting fleet paraded on Fifth avenue today with a verve and precision that brought congratulatory expressions from landlubbers and high ranking officers of the Army.

Maj. Gen. Dennis E. Nolan, commander of the Second Corps Area, and grand marshal of the parade, called the demonstration "amazing."

"How the sailors do it in the little time they have off the ships is beyond me," he said.

The Army regulars—2,000 seasoned veterans from Governors Island—preceded the 6,000 sailors and marines when the parade swept up the avenue in a swift cadence of 120 paces a minute.

Twenty Bands in Line.

"Anchors Aweigh!" blared alternately from the instruments of 20 service bands while a quarter million New Yorkers, on sidewalks and in office buildings, cheered and waved.

A regiment of marines, sunbronzed faces gleaming above khaki uniforms, was first of the naval contingents. Then followed 17 brigades of sailors, each group designated by a placard showing the ship to which the marchers are attached.

The "tars" wore warm-weather whites and their equipment glistened in the bright sunshine.

Rear Admiral Thomas T. Craven, commander of Battleship Division No. 1, led the marching gobs.

The officers and men were transported in 115 buses to the starting point for the 3-mile march. At Madison Square officials watched the parade from the official reviewing stand.

Cardinal Hayes Watches.

Admiral David F. Sellers, commander in chief of the visiting fleet, with 18 vice admirals and rear admirals and his own staff, stood at attention with Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Josephus Daniels, Ambassador to Mexico and a former Secretary of the Navy; Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations; city officials and other dignitaries.

Patrick Cardinal Hayes, dressed in his archepiscopal robes, stepped from St. Patrick's Cathedral as the parade approached and reviewed the passing ranks.

Ticker tape and torn scraps of paper, New York's conventional accompaniment for gala occasions, showered the parade.

With the presence of the fleet in New York, the Navy had things pretty well its own way yesterday at the Army and Navy parade. At least they were numerically the stronger. A detachment is shown in the parade up Fifth avenue.

New Clew Upholds Fire Suicide Claim

Sacramento, June 2 (AP).—Authorities claimed today they had new evidence substantiating their theory that Virginia Johnson, 22, daughter of State Treasurer Charles G. Johnson, committed suicide by burning herself here last Monday night. Her father has contended she was "murdered by a fiend."

The asserted new evidence was a statement by Miss Gussie Sieh, one of Johnson's neighbors, that she saw Virginia leave an alley Monday afternoon carrying "a glass container." Another neighbor previously told a similar story to police immediately after the body was found.

A gallon glass jug half filled with kerosene was found beside Virginia's seared body in a private garage three blocks from the Johnson home.

France's New Spy Suspect Is Found Native of Chicago

Toulon, France, June 2 (AP).—Investigators of the latest spy suspect got as far today as to decide that his name is Onufri Nikolajizuk and that he was born in Chicago, June 12, 1896.

This information they obtained from a German passport issued last December, but, while it was something of a triumph for the police to straighten out the spelling of the name, other phases of the inquiry lagged.

Nikolajizuk continued to insist that he was a "globe trotter," who innocently wandered into the naval arsenal, where he was arrested yesterday.

He said he came to France with the Tenth Infantry during the World War and went to Germany after the armistice, wandering around that country for 10 years working at odd jobs.

After that, he said, he visited Belgium, France and Spain and then came back to France, where he became a wandering post card seller.

The suspect had no French visa on his passport, and said that he is "an independent who loves his liberty" and therefore did not want to bother with the red tape of getting one.

For having been in the arsenal without authorization the American is subject to at least one month's imprisonment and expulsion from the country.

Henry Hornblower, 70, Critically Hurt in Crash

Plymouth, Mass., June 2 (AP).—Henry Hornblower, 70, a partner in the Boston brokerage firm of Hornblower & Weeks, was critically injured today when he lost control of his automobile and crashed into two trees.

It was said Hornblower had suffered serious injuries to his head, fractured ribs and multiple cuts and bruises, but physicians expressed the opinion that he would recover.

Forest Lake Paroled.

Rolph Loses Fight for Life; Colorful Career Ends at 64

ing relapses left him weaker. The climax came this afternoon when Dr. J. M. Scanland, superintendent of the State Hospital at Agnew, announced:

"Dead—1:30 p. m."

"Sunny Jim" Rolph, whose personal characteristics and long public career made him known on two continents, died as his son, James Rolph 3d, held his hand. Mrs. Rolph and the Governor's three brothers, Will, Ronald and Tom, were at the bedside.

The duties of governor immediately fell upon Lieut. Gov. Frank F. Merriam, of Long Beach. Like Rolph, a Republican, Merriam, a former Iowa State legislator, is 67 years old, a native of Hopkinton, Iowa. He had announced previously for the Republican nomination for Governor.

Rolph's capacity for making friends, his acts and gestures of generosity and his enormous capacity for work made him one of the outstanding political figures of the country. He held decorations from France, Japan, and other countries.

The Rolph smile was famous. He never appeared in public without a gardenia in his buttonhole. He was ever ready to crown a beauty queen, throw the first ball at the opening game of the season's National pastime, make a speech, meet an incoming dignitary or a visiting actor.

The Governor died in a coma into which he had lapsed some three hours previously. His last gesture came during the morning, when he opened his eyes and smiled faintly, indicating recognition of his son.

23 Years Public Service.

Dr. Scanland announced the cause of death as heart failure and congestion of the lungs complicated by kidney trouble.

Rolph's death ended 23 years of public service, 19 of them served as Mayor of San Francisco, where he became prominent through his humanitarian work after the earthquake and fire of 1906.

Rolph immediately came to the aid of the city, where he was born in the mission district. On horseback or in his buckboard "Jim" Rolph drove through the streets as the embers still smoldered, directing the homeless to refuge and surveying the wants of the destitute. As rebuilding began he fought for civic improvements.

"Sunny Jim" first was elected Mayor of San Francisco in 1911. As mayor he was at the head of the preparedness parade in 1916 at the time a bomb exploded, killing 10 persons and injuring 40 others. Rolph immediately hurried to the scene and directed removal of the injured to hospitals. Sixteen years later, as Governor, he refused clemency to Thomas J. Mooney, convicted with Warren Billings for participating in the bombing despite the pleas of his close friend, former Mayor James J. Walker of New York.

Depression Reduced Fortune.

During the World War his personal fortune increased many fold as he turned out ships for the French government. But he lost millions of dollars in the post war depression, many of his vessels going to ruin on the tidelands.

He first sought the Governorship in 1919, going down to defeat. Again he sought the office in 1930 on the Republican ticket and won the election by a landslide.

Gov. Rolph usually was outspoken and his stand on the lynchings of Thomas Thurmond and John M. Holmes here last November 26 brought widespread condemnation and acclaim.

The two men were lynched by a mob which broke into the Santa Clara County jail after the body of Brooke L. Hart, son of a San Jose merchant, had been found in San Francisco Bay. Holmes and Thurmond were accused of killing the youth after they had kidnaped him for ransom.

Gov. Rolph had refused to send troops to guard the accused men.

Refuses to Send Troops.

"What? Send troops to protect those guys?" Rolph exclaimed. "I will pardon any one convicted of lynching them. The aroused people of San Jose made a good job of it. We show the Nation that this State is not going to tolerate kidnaping."

Taking a keen delight in aviation, Rolph became known as the "flying Governor" through his frequent use of airplanes.

He was a tireless worker and insisted on being at his desk during his last illness, despite the warnings of his physicians. While speaking during a shower at Marysville several weeks ago, Gov. Rolph contracted a cold, which developed later into his fatal illness.

Insisted on Working.

But he insisted on signing State papers, brought to him at a San Francisco hospital, and later returned to his office to put his signature on hundreds of diplomas for University of California students.

"I've got work to do," he told his worried physicians, when they insisted he remain in bed for a much-needed rest.

Then, last May 15, he finally acceded to the plans of his family and physicans, and announced his retirement from public life.

"Twenty-three years of arduous public service, 19 of them as Mayor of San Francisco and approximately 4 as Governor, have left me broken in both health and fortune," he said. "The loss of fortune has not troubled me greatly or held me back, but without sound health I could not undertake such an activity as four years more of the intense labor of the Governorship."

Tokyo Prince Visits Ruler

Japanese Emperor Sends Kin on Manchurian Trip.

Tokyo, June 2 (AP).—In a gesture calling attention to recognition of Manchukuo as an independent nation, Emperor Hirohito has sent his brother, Prince Chichibu, on a state visit to Emperor Kang Teh.

Prince Chichibu, who, until the recent birth of a son to the Empress, was heir presumptive, left tonight for Shimonoseki, there to embark on the navy's new 10,000-ton cruiser, Ashigara, for Hsinking, capital of Manchukuo.

The state visit will be carried out with pomp and ceremony, recognizing Kang Teh, formerly known as Henry Pu-Yi, as an emperor fully worthy of a call from the royal family of Japan.

The prince is carrying personal messages and gifts from his brother and the Empress.

Japan has insisted to the world that Manchukuo, formed from Manchurian provinces taken from China by Japanese troops, is an independent nation which other countries should recognize.

So far, only Japan and El Salvador have extended recognition. The League of Nations has advised against diplomatic relations.

Billion Relief Bill Reported; House Shaken

Republicans Charge Plan Permits $7,000,000,000 Expenditures.

amount Secretary Ickes' Public Works Administration might allocate for construction. Of that amount, $40,000,000 would go for new Navy building authorized under the Vinson bill; $190,000,000 to complete projects already partially provided for, and $267,300,000 for new allocations.

But Republican critics charged a clause in the bill giving the RFC power to buy bonds of beneficiaries of PWA grants, potentially might set up a "revolving fund" of $2,500,000,000 that could be used for further allocations. To this, Administration supporters replied, "poppycock."

As the dispute waxed warm, House leaders serenly went ahead with plans to drive through the legislation tomorrow without change.

Briefly, the bill reported yesterday provides an $899,675,000 jackpot from which the President could draw funds necessary to continue the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Tennessee Valley Authority, public works and relief activities.

After $500,000,000 of the amount is set aside for public works, it was estimated that $285,000,000 of the remainder would go to the CCC and $48,000,000 to the TVA, Representatie Buchanan said.

Big Grants for Roads.

Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins told the committee $640,000,000 is all he will need to carry relief activities through March 1, in addition to the $250,000,000 he has on hand to carry him through July 1. As there won't be that much money left in the general fund, it is assumed he would go to the RFC for the difference, under powers provided in the bill.

"With $110,000,000 a month, we can do a good job," said Hopkins.

Specifically earmarked in the bill was $100,000,000 for outright road grants to the States, and $65,000,000 for public buildings. Another $100,000,000 in road money was authorized to be spent in 1936, with half the amount used to "match" similar funds put up by the States. Another $100,000,000 authorized for 1937 would all be used to "match" State road funds.

The bill provides an additional $11,230,000 for forest trails, Indian Reservation roads and roads over public lands.

With $150,000,000 already appropriated for AAA purchase of cattle and dairy products, and $6,543,393 in regular deficiency appropriations provided in the measure, the $1,178,543,393 bill stays just within the $3,166,000,000 emergency aggregate the President allowed himself in his budget message.

Spending Behind Schedule.

The Government last night was far behind in its scheduled spending, Treasury figures showed. Although the President forecast a $7,309,000,000 Treasury deficit, it developed yesterday that books were unbalanced by only $3,287,466,000, leaving at least $3,000,000,000 in emergency funds, carried over, that could be laid out next year.

Assailing the deficiency bill reported out yesterday by the Appropriations Committee, Representative Taber contended there is no definite limit to pyramided funds of the RFC and PWA on which the President might draw in the name of relief.

Over and above the $1,178,543,393 appropriated in the bill, he said, $4,000,000,000 potentially could be drained from the RFC, and $1,500,000,000 more might be yanked back from PWA funds already allotted but not disbursed. He said $350,000,000 in bonds held by the PWA can be sold to the RFC, this amount added to the $500,000,000 appropriated in the bill, and a "revolving fund" created that might pyramid up to $2,500,000,000.

Legal Aid Society Swamped By Spring Crop of Swindles

Free Court Help Is Given Hundreds of Needy in District.

Oiling the wheels of the law for hundreds of Washingtonians who otherwise would be denied access to the District's courts because of insufficient funds, the Legal Aid Society, a Community Chest agency, is suffering from the repercussions of spring.

The reason, each of the 12 members of the organization's staff agrees, is because when spring comes it is accompanied by a desire for sudden wealth. This desire, a first cousin of wanderlust, leads hundreds of trusting and humble persons to invest their savings in worthless lots and resort enterprises.

Founded in 1932, the Legal Aid Society was the expression of a practical ideal long cherished by many distinguished jurists and attorneys. Day by day they had seen the unavoidable inequalities of the law parade before them. Something should be done about it, and something was.

"Our present society is the result," Mrs. Pearl Bellman Klein, one of the legal staff, asserted yesterday.

Only last year the society handled 900 cases for its poverty-stricken clients in courts. It was successful in most of these.

Its first budget, which was granted last year, was only $1,800. The society, with offices in a pleasant, old-fashioned building at 1018 Vermont avenue northwest, gets its rent free.

In and out of the offices, from 2 p. m. until 4 p. m. on week days, and from 10 a. m. until noon on Saturdays, pours a stream of troubled humanity.

"We are to be ejected—have they the right?" ask some.

"The money is due us, after all, but we can't collect a cent, and we can't afford a lawyer," say others.

"We must be divorced—otherwise we can not say what will happen," sighs another pair.

So, aimed as a spearhead at shysters and at dishonesty, the Legal Society goes its way in the District.

Sixty-five per cent of the cases handled are those of white persons, the remainder being colored. Only slightly over 5 per cent are foreign born.

"We try to humanize the law and unravel the law's knots and problems for these poor people who know little of it," said Miss Beatrice A. Clephane, director, yesterday.

"But in the spring our troubles begin. That's when the unscrupulous ply their trade, and sell seaweed for lots. And, believe it or not, the Mississippi bubble lures otherwise sensible people still—fascinating and tragic as a will o' th' wisp——."

Camp Applications Far Above Limit

Admission of 170 tuberculous children, nearly three times the maximum which can be accommodated, has been sought to the summer camp conducted by the District Tuberculosis Association a month in advance of the opening date.

"With 1,390 cases of children in Washington diagnosed as tuberculous, the number of applications for admission to the camp is expected to increase in the coming weeks," Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, association executive, said after yesterday's board meeting.

The society hopes to obtain additional funds required to give special care during the summer for all its little patients. Two anonymous persons have contributed checks totalling $250. Contributions toward provision for increased camp facilities may be made to Walter S. Pratt, jr., treasurer.

Accidental Drowning, Bathtub Death Finding

A verdict of accidental drowning was returned by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday in the death of Mrs. Charlotte Dodds, 48, whose body was found Tuesday in an overflowing bathtub in her apartment at the Westchester.

Mrs. Dodds was the wife of Charles B. Dodds, a newspaper correspondent.

Convention Draws Capital Kiwanians

Delegations from 50 Kiwanis clubs in the Capital district, which includes Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, are soon to leave for the eighteenth annual convention of Kiwanis International at Toronto, Ontario, June 10-14.

The Washington club will be represented by Lewis T. Breuninger, president; Harold N. Marsh, vice president; Edward D. Shaw, secretary; Roe Fulkerson, first vice president, and Edwin F. Hill, past president and 1933 governor of the Capital district.

E. I. Carruthers, of Charlottesville, Va., present governor of the Capital district, will head the delegates, who leave Washington in a special car Saturday, arriving in Toronto the next afternoon. One hundred delegates, their families and guests will represent the Capital district.

Bowles Given 3-Year Term

Disbarred Capital Lawyer Also Fined $3,000 on Tax Charge.

Baltimore, June 2 (Spl.).—Sentence of three years in a Federal penitentiary and $3,000 fine was imposed in Federal court today upon Norman S. Bowles, disbarred Washington attorney, convicted last week on income tax evasion charges.

The sentence was imposed by Federal Judge W. Calvin Chesnut, after he had overruled a motion for a new trial. Bowles was charged with failing to file an income tax return for 1930 and filing a false return in 1931.

Bowles immediately announced he would file an appeal from the sentence and Judge Chesnut set his bail at $10,000. Bowles assured the court there was no need to set the bail at such a large amount, insisting he would not run away even if he had been given 15 years in prison.

After a long debate, the judge announced he would leave the amount of bail open and if Bowles could find a bondsman willing to advance $7,500 he would consider that sum.

Bargagni Parade Marshal.

Sergt. A. J. Bargagni, of the District of Columbia Fire Department and president of the National Firemen's Association, will be grand marshal of the parade to be held in Alexandria on Labor Day, and Fire Chief James M. Duncan, jr., of Alexandria, is general chairman of the parade committee. Councilman E. C. Davison is honorary chairman.

President Bargagni has had charge of the parades held in Washington in past years by the National Association, which have always been highly successful. This year, owing to the fact that another parade is to be held in Washington, Alexandria has been chosen. The association has engaged headquarters in the George Mason Hotel, and it is understood the Exemp Firemen's Association, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., which will bring 400 members to Alexandria, also have engaged headquarters in the George Mason.

Dan S. Hollenga, business manager of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, which is sponsoring the parade, will go to Cambridge, Md., on June 20 to address the Maryland State Firemen's Convention and invite them to come to Alexandria Labor Day.

President Bargagni and Mr. Hollenga will hold a conference Tuesday regarding appointment of additional committees.

Callaway Pupils Presented.

The Alexandria United Charities will meet at 8 o'clock tomorrow night in the Virginia Public Service Building, when the by-laws committee will submit its report. The finance committee also will report, and there will be a view of accomplishments in May. All representatives have been urged to attend.

Mrs. Mary Cabell Callaway presented her dance pupils in a "Literary Revue" Friday night and last night in the auditorium of Maury School for the benefit of the Alexandria Library. Mrs. D. C. The presentation was arranged by Mrs. Callaway, with scenes laid in the rooms of the Alexandria Library. Miss Eleanor Watkins portrayed the librarian. Characters were from well-known books, each giving a dance number suited to the type of book.

Fire Carnival Closes.

The carnival of Rescue Squad No. 1, of the Alexandria Fire Department, which has been in progress all week, closed last night. Although the weather was unfavorable the first few ngihts, it is understood the carnival has been a success, and the rescue squad has netted a tidy sum for its treasury. The proceeds are to be used principally for the purchase of uniforms for 29 members of the squad.

A one-hour parking limit has been established on the west side of Washington street, running north a distance of approximately 60 feet. The police department has stenciled a sign on the sidewalk indicating the limit.

The banks of Alexandria will be closed tomorrow in observance of the birthday of Jefferson Davis.

LaGuardia Loses Temper; Attacks Idle Group Head

New York, June 3 (AP).—Mayor LaGuardia lost his temper today when he received representatives of 2,000 men and women who marched to the City Hall after staging an orderly demonstration before offices of the public welfare department.

The mayor accused William Gaynor, spokesman for the united action committee of 100, of being one of "those yellow leaders who incite these poor misguided people to riot and beat the police, and then run away like yellow dogs."

A. L. Wirin, of the American Civil Liberties Union, interceded with a plea that the matter be discussed "dispassionately and without emotionalism."

Gaynor then charged Mayor LaGuardia had ordered the police to "go out and beat up" demonstrators. The mayor said that was a "deliberate lie."

The demonstrators sought more relief from the welfare department.

Favorable Report Seen On Bill for Auto Safety

Favorable report on the bill requiring automobile drivers to establish financial responsibility is expected to be made to the Senate tomorrow or Tuesday by Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee.

The bill requires drivers of both private and public vehicles to establish responsibility in case of accidents. The committee amended the measure so as to leave discretionary with the Commissioners reissuance of operating permits to persons from whom they have been taken. The bill formerly forbade return of permits until operators had paid damages awarded against them.

Buddhist Abbot Sails Back to Adopted Home

Vancouver, June 2 (AP).—The Buddhist Abbot Chao Kung, formerly known as Trebitsch Lincoln, sailed today on the liner Empress of Canada for China, whence he came en route to England.

He had hoped to establish a Buddhist monastery in Europe, but was turned back by British immigration authorities who refused him entry. The abbot was alleged to have been a European spy several years ago.

Klan Dispute Again Strikes Alabama Race

Attorney Avers Opponent Backed by Masked Secret Order.

Birmingham, Ala., June 2 (AP).—Dormant for years, the Ku Klux Klan is a political issue in the race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination between former Gov. Bibb Graves and Maj. Frank M. Dixon, Birmingham attorney, who in ten days settle the question in a "run-off" primary.

The Klan question was thrust to the front by Maj. Dixon, who charged that former Gov. Graves, who had Klan support in his successful race in 1926, had the same support this year.

"A smoke screen," replied the former Governor, who declared his opponent in "desperation" sought to inject the question of race.

Masked Days End.

"The day of masked men shall not come again, and it will not come again if I am elected Governor," Dixon said as he stumped the State against the former Governor.

Declaring the charges and the linking of his candidacy with William F. Feagin, State Board of Administration president, "smoke screens," Graves said:

"Hate and prejudice have no place in the scheme of things; honest effort, patriotism, perseverance, the will to do, and united cooperation, and nothing else, will get us out of this mire of depression."

Target of Graves.

The proposed "short ballot" Dixon advocates, eliminating the election of all State officers except the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, has been a target for Graves, who declared it would make the Governor "a Hitler and take from the people the right to select their governing officers."

Two incumbent Congressmen face run-off contests: Miles C. Allgood, of Gadsden, in the Fifth District, is being opposed by Maj. Joe Starnes, of Gunersville, and George Huddleston, in the Ninth, is opposed by Walter Brower, public ownership of utilities advocate.

Lehman Begins Counties Fight

Calls Special Session to Consider Reorganizing of Government.

New York, June 2 (U.P.).—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman today announced he will convene the Legislature in extraordinary session "on or about June 10" to consider reorganization and abolition of county government, not only in the five New York City counties, but in the up-State counties as well.

Answering the request of Alfred E. Smith, chairman of the New York City Charter Commission, the Governor said: "It is my strong conviction that reorganization of county government, through constitutional amendment, should be made readily available.

"It is clear," he added, "that if any constitutional amendments are adopted this year and passed again at the regular session next year they can be approved by the people in the fall of 1935, and that unless this procedure is followed the amendments can not be submitted to the people until November of 1937."

Princess Leaves Clinic, but Prince Plays Polo Alone

London, June 2 (AP).—Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani had recovered sufficiently today from the ailment that sent her to a medical clinic to return to the hotel where her parents are staying, but neither she nor her parents went out to see her husband, Prince Alexis, play polo.

A member of the Hutton entourage explained today that the ailment which brought Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn L. Hutton to London to visit their daughter was a stomach disorder.

The princess was said to have contracted the illness while in China on her round-the-world honeymoon trip.

The parents occupied an adjoining suite to that of the prince and princess and there was no indication that the friendly relationship in evidence between the prince and his parents-in-law when they arrived yesterday had changed in any way.

A friend of the family said it has not been determined whether the princess will accompany her parents back to the United States in the near future. Whatever she does, the prince has already said that his polo playing engagements will keep him here until next month.

Autoist Talks Way Into Court Charge For Drunk-Driving

Chambersburg, Pa., June 2 (Spl.).—Clarence Morrison, of Cumberland County, talked himself into a charge of operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor yesterday. As a result he was held today by Justice Frank Fagan, of Carlisle, under $500 bond for court.

Morrison was picked up on May 11 with Arnold Dyarman, Newville, R. D. 3. Dyarman was charged with operating a car while drunk. Brought before the Franklin County court, Dyarman said he would take responsibility and was returned to the county jail.

Later Morrison came here and admitted he was driving the car in Franklin County and the information against him followed. Ryarman has been released under bond.

Resignation Denied By Revenue Lawyer

An error occurred in The Post's report yesterday of the resignation of former Representative W. C. Lankford, of Georgia, counsel in the Internal Revenue Bureau, to run for Congress. It was intended to say that he had been too busy closing a long series of bank cases to make preparations for his campaign.

School Club to Present Oregon Trail Marker

A granite monument to mark the spot where the old Oregon Trail passed by Western High School will be presented by the History Club at a ceremony tomorrow.

The monument will inclose the Daniel Boone marker, given to the school several years ago by Ezra Meeker, representing the Daniel Boone Society. The brass of which the marker is made was taken from the Battleship Maine. Miss Peggy Dow, chairman of the historical markers committee of the school, will make the presentation and Dr. Elmer S. Newton, principal, will accept it on behalf of the school.

Speedy Judge In Senate Race A Zestful Critic

Bourquin, Montana, Noted as Most Outspoken Jurist in West.

San Francisco, June 2 (AP).—Montana's Senatorial campaign may have gained in zip and zest by the entrance into the race of George M. Bourquin, but some of the color has faded from the Federal courtrooms of the West in his retirement as a judge.

The jurist, who left the bench after 22 years to seek the Republican nomination for the United States Senate, held the title of the West's most outspoken Federal judge.

Frequently assigned to Pacific Coast districts — and on occasions to the Atlantic seaboard — his assignments were admittedly to clean up congested dockets. The speed with which cases moved in his court was a revelation to those accustomed to the laws' delays and usually a "shock" to district attorneys accustomed to dictating the conduct of cases.

"Never in Doubt."

"This court may be in error, but it is never in doubt" was one of his philosophies, and the victims of his frank comment from the bench ranged from the United States Supreme Court, which he charged in one of his opinions with having contracted "cold feet," to a Nation-wide woman's organization whose representatives he termed "dear old ladies" and counseled to return to their home duties and "let me run this court."

Intolerant of quibbling and resentful at the prosecution of petty violators of the prohibition law, which he charged made a police court out of a dignified department of the judiciary, at Butte he fined a rancher 10 cents for possession of a quarter of a pint of whisky.

He concluded another opinion of acquittal in a petty water adjudication case with these words: "So the finding is not guilty—but don't do it again. Proceedings dismissed. No costs."

Law Administration Scored.

With the big-time liquor offenders, however, the Montana judge was often severe, and in one of these cases at Trenton, N. J., he delivered himself of a stinging criticism against the administration of law in the United States.

"If America is the most criminal country of the earth—and it is—if the laws are most poorly enforced, justice most weakly administered—and they are—the reprehensible treatment of officers of the law is a contributing cause," he said.

Disposition of minor cases at the rate of two a minute, by accepting guilty pleas wholesale, was not an unusual accomplishment in his efforts to clear the dockets so more important trials could be held.

Obstreperous tactics of prosecutors reaped a harvest of contempt fines, and it is probable no other judge has fined so many district attorneys.

A weakness in his hard-boiled armor in the vigorous enforcement of Federal law was evident in his judgments of woman defendants. More than once he substituted suspended sentences or imposed fines in lieu of jail decrees with the remark, "I won't send a woman to jail until all the male law breakers are there."

U. S. Drought Relief Needs Estimated at $1,000,000,000

location of $6,576,000 for immediate expenditure in 11 States and it is conceded that is only a start.

While Capitol Hill is talking about $1,000,000,000 for drought relief and in Administration quarters $200,000,000 is the figure mentioned, it is conceded on all sides that at this moment no man is able to make an accurate estimate of what will be needed. The Congressional drought committee admitted it was approaching the problem on the assumption that the drought would remain unbroken for several weeks.

The weather during the next two weeks is the key to the problem—the damage done to crops and the families left without a means of livelihood as a result of destruction of their crops—J. B. Kincer, of the United States Weather Bureau, pointed out.

Food Shortage Feared.

Should rain in great proportion fall in the stricken area in the next two weeks, the problem would be greatly minimized—although immense damage has been done. If rain does not come to the Middle-West, not only will that area be destitute but, according to W. C. Coffey, Federal farm relief director for a dozen of the States, there will be a National food shortage in this country later in the year.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Guy G. Tugwell, acting for Secretary Henry A. Wallace, now making a personal inspection of the drought area, expressed surprise at Coffey's statement and pointed out that the large surpluses of grain now in the country would be sufficient to feed the Nation without thinking of importing foodstuffs or feed.

Kincer, however, pointed out that both winter and spring wheat are entering the most critical stage of their growth and that these crops, already badly damaged, "must have rainfall before the middle of June if they are to make anything like a satisfactory yield."

Feed Crops Hard Hit.

"Pastures and hay crops are already scorched in many places and small feed grains, such as oats and barley, must get rain within a few days if rain is to do any good," Kincer continued. "Corn still has a chance. Rains within the next week or ten days could help the corn crop.

"Ordinarily, the last half of June and the month of July is the critical time for corn. However, delay of germination beyond the middle of June endangers the corn crop from an early frost this fall."

Kincer said that "in area covered and moisture deficiency this drought surpasses any on record for the United States," adding that "the only other one to which this could be compared is the once of 1894, which occurred early in the season."

Shipstead, in his statement describing the meeting of the Congressional group, said that "it is beginning to dawn upon the country that this is the greatest disaster, due to the forces of nature, that this country has ever experienced."

Cattle Lack Food, Water.

"The drought area," he continued, "now extends from the Rocky Mountains to Maine and from Texas to the Hudson Bay. Cattle are dying for lack of food and water, and it is very probable that 6,000,000 cattle will have to be killed.

"The economic consequences of this calamity to the entire country can not be estimated at this time. The problem of relief will be greatly increased, we know, but we can not estimate what amount will be needed, because we do not know when it will rain. Sufficient funds must be appropriated at once to take care of the emergency as it develops.

"A program is now partly in operation and must be greatly enlarged. It is within the probabilities that $1,000,000,000 will be necessary for drought relief alone. We expect to have a program and request for appropriations ready for Congress by next Tuesday.

Davis Takes Hand.

Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator, met with the Congressional group and outlined the situation as reported to his department and what steps he can now take to avert distress. He said plans were being drafted to transfer cattle from dry areas to pastured regions, with railroads giving reduced rates on such traffic.

Davis also explained that under the Connally cattle bill the AAA would have available about $50,000,000 for the purchase of cattle for the use of Relief Administrator Hopkins. It is planned to make those purchases from farmers in the distressed area and to use the beef to feed the destitute in the drought regions, as well as in other parts of the country.

The scheme to transfer cattle from dry areas into regions with pasture, however, is liable to run into difficulties, as demonstrated yesterday by Gov. Floyd B. Olson of Minnesota, who ordered his State's National Guard mobilized to enforce his embargo against cattle coming into the State for any purpose, except slaughter.

To Confer Monday.

The Congressional group plans to meet again Monday, after President Roosevelt has canvassed the situation with his advisers. The procedure apparently will be to amend the urgent deficiency bill, now in the House, to provide whatever funds the Administration regards as necessary for drought relief.

If the Administration does not propose a sizable sum, the Congressional group is expected to prepare its own amendments and form itself into a steering committee to obtain their adoption. It is possible that the Congressional group will propose an appropriation of $1,000,000,000, to be used for drought relief if in the discretion of the President it becomes necessary.

Meanwhile the AAA officials have under consideration plans for releasing all farmers under contract to reduce grain acreage. The RFC Commodity Corporation yesterday issued instructions for the release of corn in sealed cribs on repayment of the loans made on the grain.

In fact it is becoming apparent that the drought has made unnecessary, for this year at least, the basic work of the AAA, the reduction of crops, with the exception of cotton, where the dry weather has been helpful in keeping down the destructive boll weevil. The AAA processing taxes, however, may be maintained, to help defray the cost of the drought.

The drought likewise has nullified Secretary Wallace's threat to the international wheat conference that unless an agreement were reached as to prices this country would start exporting the grain. At the time he made his statement there was talk of seeking an increase in this country's 90,000,000 bushel export quota.

It is now doubtful whether any wheat will be exported—because of the rapidly increasing domestic price for one reason. Instead, this country before a year ends may be forced to import wheat, which would benefit chiefly the Cenadian wheat farmers who yesterday gleefully watched moisture-laden clouds break and soak their fields, ending a 13-day drought.

How Tariff Works.

In connection with the possibility that wheat may have to be imported, the reciprocal tariff bill now before the Senate may prove a blessing to bread consumers. The tariff on wheat is 42 cents a bushel and in the case of imported wheat this would have to be paid by the consumer. Under the reciprocal tariff act the President could reduce this rate to 21 cents a bushel, by entering into a trade agreement with Canada, or some other grain-producing country with a surplus.

It is estimated that already the drought has reduced the estimated wheat crop for this year by 167,000,000 bushels, which, computed at 80 cents a bushel, means a loss of $133,600,000 to the farmers. Of the loss now estimated 52,000,000 bushels would be winter wheat and 115,000,000 bushels spring wheat.

Estimates indicate a surplus of 266,000,000 bushels of wheat for July 1. The present estimate for the new crop is 565,000,000 bushels, but this figure is rapidly dwindling. In Kansas previous, crop estimates have been cut in half.

Two-fold Program.

The "work program" which Relief Administrator Hopkins will launch at once contemplates the development of additional water supply through wells and impounding water from rivers and lakes and projects employing men and women in the canning of meat, fruits and vegetables. Work also will be offered on the roads to farmers whose crops have been destroyed.

The object of this plan is two-fold: Conserving what water and food there is left in the stricken area and giving the destitute means to care for their needs. State relief administrators will be in direct charge of this program.

Upset Canoe Reveals Man Has Drowned

Police Search for Body of Unidentified Canal Victim.

First victim of the vacation season in the District, an unidentified man, about 20 years old, believed to have been a Government worker, was drowned when a canoe in which he was riding alone overturned in the C. & O. Canal near Chain Bridge, late yesterday afternoon.

First news of the accident came when persons on the shore saw a canoe floating upside down. Harbor police rushed to the scene and immediately dragged the canal, but early last night no trace of the body had been found. Police have been unable to find any eyewitnesses to the accident.

Man Gave No Name.

Investigators were told the man rented a canoe from the Capper boathouse at Chain Bridge about 4 p. m. yesterday, but did not give his name. The overturned boat was seen about three-quarters of an hour later.

Description of the man was meager, but he is said to have had dark hair and was dressed in a blue shirt and dark trousers, but no coat.

The victim of the canal accident was one of thousands who were attracted outdoors for the Saturday afternoon holiday by ideal weather.

Temperature Is "Moderate."

Temperatures yesterday were considered "moderate" by the Weather Bureau for this season of the year. After registering 67 at 5 a. m. yesterday, the mercury rose to a high of 85 at 5 p. m.

District residents are expected to enjoy for several days the general improvement resulting in the break of the heat wave in the Chicago and Midwestern area.

For the beginning of next week scattered thundershowers are forecast over the Middle Atlantic States, keeping the temperature down until the latter part of the week, when the mercury is expected to soar to new seasonal heights.

The President's vacation tour also was broken briefly this afternoon when word was received that the threatened textile strike had been settled by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson. He adhered to his program and had no comment on either side.

Bandit Team's Victim Is Dead

John Geary, Priest Bridge, Md., Dies of Holdup Wound.

Murder was added yesterday to the list of crimes for which two colored bandits who have been terrorizing Prince Georges County are sought. A gasoline station and barbecue stand proprietor they shot three nights ago died in Casualty Hospital.

John Geary, 40, of Priest Bridge, Md., gunmen's victim, succumbed to a bullet wound in his chest. The charge from a bandit's gun tore through his right lung. He lapsed into unconsciousness early yesterday and died several hours later.

The shooting occurred when the bandits—using a police automobile they had taken from Town Bailiff Lawrence Dayton, of Bladensburg—entered Geary's shop about 1:30 a. m. When Geary was slow in raising his hands, one of the robbers fired. Geary fell to the floor while his 70-year-old father and the sheriff's son looked on. Two waitresses also saw the shooting.

"Pretty Boy" Floyd Is Believed Dead

Oklahoma City, June 2 (AP).—The mysterious disappearance of Oklahoma's wraith-like desperado, Charles "Pretty Boy" Floyd, has led his erstwhile pursuers to believe he may be dead or crippled.

Once the terror of the Southwest with his blazing machine gun, Floyd, bank robber and killer, apparently has not been connected actively with a robbery in Oklahoma since his companion, George Birdwell, was shot to death by a colored banker while attempting to rob a bank at Boley, Okla., two years ago.

John E. Johnson, assistant superintendent of the State bureau of criminal investigation, learned recently at Salisaw, Floyd's home, that his parents fear the outlaw is dead. He has not visited the family for more than a year.

Defenders of Confederacy Are Gathering for Reunion

1,600 Expected to Meet at Chattanooga for 44th Time.

Chattanooga, Tenn., June 2 (AP). With legs weirier then they were back in the sixties and the weight of years bearing heavily upon their shoulders, Confederate veterans are preparing once more to visit this historic Southern city.

About 1,600 of them, including many who followed the Stars and Bars at Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chickamauga, "The river of death," will arrive next week from as far away as California, for the forty-fourth annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans. Begnning Wednesday, the reunion will continue through Friday.

Reports that this would be the last gathering of America's oldest soldiers have been denied vigorously by veterans' leaders.

"As long as there are two Confederate veterans of the Civil War alive," said Quartermaster General Charles A. De Saussure, of Memphis, Tenn., "we will meet in annual reunion. In our hearts there remains the yearning to get together."

The call for the reunion has been issued by Gen. Homer Atkinson, 80-year-old commander in chief, of Petersburg, Va., who entered the Civil War as a lad about 16, was captured in the battle of Fort Gregg a few months later and spent the last war months in a "Yankee" prison.

Camp Atkinson, established at Chattanooga High School and scheduled to open Monday to receive the earliest Confederate arrivals, was named in honor of the veterans' commander.

Beer Sellers Urged To Renew Licenses

Prince Georges Permits Expire June 15.

With the first beer licenses issued in Prince Georges County expiring June 15, James A. Heal, clerk to the liquor commissioners, has asked all license holders to file renewal applications early.

All licenses must be advertised in a local newspaper for two weeks before they can be issued, according to an act of the last session of the Maryland Legislature. While the advertising is in progress, the board issues the applicant a temporary license.

On June 15 a total of 59 "on sale" and 13 "off sale" licenses are scheduled to expire. However, 15 of the "on sale" and 5 of the "off sale" licenses have been transferred to liquor licenses, which will continue to the valid date.

9 Boys Rounded Up In Thieves Drive

Fredericksburg, Va., June 2 (Spl.). Nine boys from 9 to 16 years of age were rounded up by police here last night and questioned concerning petty robberies reported from at least 12 establishments.

Enlistments Open For China Service

Baltimore, June 2 (Spl.).—Within the next few days the Third Corps Area Recruiting Service will be called upon to secure 45 men for the United States Army force in China.

Thirty-seven of these enlistments will be for the Infantry and the remainder for the Medical Department. Included in the eight places in the Medical Department are two for wardmasters and one for an operating room technician. These recruitments are to fill vacancies caused by the return to the United States of soldiers who have completed their enlistments.

Enlistments for service in China are limited to native-born Americans, unmarried, with prior Army service, who were last discharged with excellent character. The applicants also must be between the ages of 21 and 35 and have resided in the United States at least two years since their last service in China. Men enlisted for the United States Infantry in China must have had service in a combatant arm.

Suspect Makes Bond On Federal Charge

Norfolk, Va., June 2 (Spl.).—John T. Cacace, 28, today furnished a $10,000 bond for his appearance before United States Commissioner Harry A. Brinkley on June 12, to answer a charge of receiving and concealing stolen automobiles.

Lynchburg, Va., June 2 (AP).—Preachers, laymen and religious education workers of the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will attend two pastors' schools opening simultaneously on June 18, it was announced today.

The announcement was made by Dean William Archer Wright, of Richmond, on behalf of the Virginia Conference School to be held June 18 to 25 at Randolph-Macon's Woman's College, Lynchburg, and Dean H. H. Sherman of Front Royal, for the Baltimore Pastors' School to be held June 18 to 29 at Randolph-Macon Academy, Front Royal.

Electric Rate Crusader Named to County Board

The resignation of Edmund D. Campbell, chairman of the semi-official public utilities commission of Arlington County, was accepted yesterday by the county board. Campbell was appointed a member of the county board last Tuesday.

Having led the fight as chairman of the public utilities commission in an effort to get reduced electric light rates, Campbell says, as a member of the board, he feels now that he can be of greater service to the county in the rate fight.

Rooster Attacks Baby In Yard of His Home

Murderer Becomes Painter

Convict, Who Slew Despoiler of Home, Amazes Prison Officials With Portraits of His Benefactors, Done in Oil.

Baltimore, June 2 (Spl.).—A former tip-off man for prohibition raiders, sentenced for life to the Maryland Penitentiary as a murderer, has amazed prison officials by becoming a skillful painter of portraits in oils.

His story recently became known when he presented the Rev. John H. Gonso and his wife, evangelists of the Church of God in Hagerstown, with a portrait of themselves he had painted from a photograph and from memory.

The man is Reginald Walters. Eight years ago he was a country carpenter, living near Hagerstown. He was a respectable citizen of the community, the head of a family, and the superintendent of his Sunday school. He had never had a lesson in art work, and took no interest in painting.

During slack times he made a small income on the side by acting as an informer for dry officers in Washington County. He "spotted" stills and liquor caches and tipped off the agents, who raided the bootleg and moonshine dens.

He thus came to know Hunter R. Stotler, chief agent of the prohibition forces in Western Maryland. Whenever Stotler was in the vicinity of Hagerstown he used to stay at the home of his good friend, Walters.

One night Walters awoke and found his wife missing from his room, he testified at his trial. He tiptoed downstairs, according to his confession, and saw his wife and Stotler in an affectionate scene. He said nothing, but continued to pilot Stotler about Washington County on the hunt for bootleg caches.

But the memory of what he had seen rankled, and one lonely night, on the Boonsboro road, he stopped the car in which Stotler and he were riding, and said: "Stot, you broke up my home, and now I'm going to kill you."

Stotler's body was found the next day. Walters was accused of the murder, confessed, and at his trial was sentenced to life in the Maryland Penitentiary, located here.

For the first time in his life, Walters found time to study, and books to study from. He became interested in drawing; he studied anatomy, and he practiced constantly. He was encouraged by Dr. Gonso and Mrs. Gonso, who visited him in prison at every opportunity.

Six years passed, and as Walters became more and more proficient in his art work, news of his progress passed beyond the walls of the prison. Finally, to Walters' surprise, there came to him a commission to design several hundred difficult anatomical charts for use in a Baltimore hospital.

He made the charts, and they are being used today in at least two hospitals for the education of medical students and nurses.

Recently Dr. Gonso and his wife passed through Baltimore and stopped off to see Walters. He was expecting them and had a gift ready. It was a large painting of the clergyman and his wife, done in oils. He had used only a small photograph for the difficult task, relying principally upon his memory of his friends.

Virginia Labor Tension Ends At Two Points

Board Ruling Satisfies Tubize Workers; Mill Week Shortened.

Richmond, June 2 (Spl.).—Tension owing to labor disagreements involving workers of the Tubize Chatillon plant at Hopewell and textile workers at Danville was abated today with the National Labor Board's ruling in the Tubize case, and with the establishment of a shorter work week in the Riverside and Dan River Cotton Mills, employing more than 6,000 persons at Danville.

Developments were:

At Hopewell R. S. Burrows, works manager of the Tubize plant, posted a notice condemning "agitators" and saying that persons discharged "for soliciting union membership in the plant, which is illegal" and for other reasons will not be reinstated through the efforts of these "outside agitators."

Mr. Burrows also stated that the company's policy of not recognizing the right of any individual employe or organization "to dictate its employment policy" is unchanged.

Preparations were made for a union mass meeting at Hopewell at which representatives of the Virginia Federation of Labor expect to report that the labor board's decision was a fair one and that there is no immediate call for further action by the organized workers.

30-Hour Week Set.

A 30-hour instead of a 40-hour work week was established at the Danville mills, an arrangement which was viewed as a compromise pleasing to the workers.

The Virginia Federation of Labor announced that Charles J. Hughes, past president, has been chosen special organizer for the State. Hughes said that he would advise the workers that there is no present need for a strike.

Mr. Hughes, a Richmond printer, who last month completed his second term as V. F. L. president, said, "We are entirely satisfied with the Hopewell case presented at the Labor Board hearing in Washington yesterday. From newspaper accounts and our representative, it appears to me that the stand taken by the attorney for the Tubize firm in not agreeing to recognize the authority of the Labor Board is unpatriotic and ridiculous, to say the least, and in defiance of an executive order of President Roosevelt issued early in April. I shall continue to advise the members of the Hopewell union not to strike until every available means has been used to bring about satisfactory settlement in the matter."

Condemns Agitators.

The circular issued by R. B. Burrows, plant manager at Hopewell, today, condemned in vigorous terms "certain irresponsible agitators and organizers from the North," who have come in "for the sole purpose of making trouble in a peaceful community," and have "used all the tricks of their trade in order to obtain sympathy and income."

"In desperation," Mr. Burrows said, "they have tried to obtain the aid of the National Labor Board, but have failed because the management has been fair and just and secure in its interpretation of the law.

"Persons who have been discharged for soliciting union membership in the plant, which is illegal, for infraction of company rules, and because of reduction of force due to poor business conditions, have been led to believe that they can be reinstated through the efforts of these outside agitators. This is not true."

Bees Sting Dog to Death, Attack Man When He Rushes to Rescue

Staunton, Va., June 2 (Spl.).—There's a bit of alliteration that goes something like this:

"Beset by busily biting bumble bees," &c.—but Frank S. Driver, Weyers Cave banker and newspaper correspondent, doesn't want to hear anyhting about bees.

They killed his Belgian police dog, and all but put the skids under him.

"Chang" had been left in the Driver yard, tied to an apple tree. The owner, nearby, heard him yelp and found the dog had been attacked by hundreds of bees.

Driver succeeded in liberating the dog—but paid a price himself. The dog was in agony and Driver started for Staunton to a veterinarian's office, 13 miles away. The dog died en route.

Driver was attended by a physician here.

The program was in two parts, part one being music and song and part two an operetta.

Impersonations of some of the familiar old songs was a decided hit, while the appealing "Coon Jiggers" brought hearty applause.

"The Little Runaway Posies," a playlet, comprising all the elementary and most of the intermediate grade children, costumed as early spring flowers, was a most charming interpretation.

"Melilotte," a fairy operetta, was the feature of the evening's entertainment. This was beautifully reproduced by the upper grade children. Those starring in the cast were Ruth Waters, as Melilotte; Margaret Bennett, as Turtle Woman; Henry Musser, as Silver Dollar, and Dorsey Unglesbee, as Silver Dime.

The program was directed by Miss Edwina Mullinix, supervisor.

Motoring Costs Hiked Million Daily by NRA

Increases In Prices In Past Year Account For Added Burden.

The summer touring season will find motorists paying about $1,000,000 a day for National recovery costs, owing to increased prices.

Increases in gasoline prices alone since the recovery program and the oil code wnet into effect will add about $20,000,000 monthly to the bill of vacationists and others who take to the highways.

The Federal Trade Commission recently reported that gasoline prices had increased an average of 1.04 cents per gallon since July 1, 1933. As this year's consumption is estimated at 16,000,000,000 gallons, the increased cost will be $166,400,000 a year or $14,000,000 a month.

As largest consumption comes in the summer, however, it is estimated here that the monthly increase during the motoring season will be at least $20,000,000.

To this must be added other increases owing to the NRA ban on price-cutting in tires, higher costs for repairs and increases in the price of new automobiles.

Gasoline Taxes.

In addition to these increased costs, Federal and State governments are continuing to dig deeply into the motorist's pocket with direct gasoline taxes.

Combined Federal and State taxes average 5.2 cents per gallon. Every State now has a gasoline tax, the highest being 7 cents per gallon in Florida and Tennessee.

Total gasoline taxes this year will amount to about $832,000,000. One bright spot is that the Federal gasoline tax has been reduced from 1½ cents to 1 cent per gallon.

Consumers representatives are keeping close watch on increased costs placed on motorists through code operations. The American Automobile Association took a leading part in the fight against gasoline price fixing.

Oil administration representatives feel the average increase of 1 cent per gallon since last July 1 is justified. The industry at that time was demoralized, but Oil Administrator Harold L. Ickes has served notice he will not tolerate unwarranted increases.

Explaining the automobile association's activities in trying to guard the motorists' interests, President Thomas P. Henry said:

Increased Costs.

"We could not help but be apprehensive that the multiplicity of codes touching on motor transport in some form from petroleum to toll bridges and the hours that a truck driver may work, might increase owner costs.

"In the scramble for advantages, it is not to be wondered that there have been times when we have felt that the motorist might become the forgotten man. This was particularly the case at the beginning when the consumer viewpoint was none too strongly attested. It became necessary for the organization to take a definite stand on a good many things, including our strenuous opposition to the fixing of prices for pertoleum products.

"The reports I get would seem to indicate that the point has now been reached where the consumer viewpoint is securing more consideration."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Colors and the Human Eye.

G. F. N. writes: The spectrum of light is governed by the colors of the visible rainbow, which is in reality the spectrum transformed into visibility. Beginning at the shortest waves, we have violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, &c. This visible blue tends to filter the light rays as they enter the human eye. If it were not for it we would be seeing red one minute and violet the next. In reality it acts as a light filter and allows only the light of the visible light range to enter the human eye.

This visible blue is mainly obtained from yellow carrots. However, it is also obtained from spinach, green beans or any of the green summer vegetables. It is also obtained from foods that contain a proportion of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, although the actual amount varies at times. In fact, it can be looked for in practically all carbohydrates.

This brings us to another method of seeing the actual visible, visual blue in our hydrocarbon flames (illuminating gases). In the recent Settle-Fordney stratosphere flight both officers mentioned that the sky is a visual blue and not purple, violet, red or any other color.

The early theory that this was a purple color probably needs a little explanation. Purple is a color composed of red and blue. As the principal wave of sunlight is violet, which is also red and blue, the visual blue immediately attacks this violet and for the time of a split second the violet is turned into purple. This causes the general belief that it is a visual purple and places some doubt upon the visual blue theory.

This visual blue is related to vitamin A. It may be noticed that severe eye strain causes a sort of pus formation which is generally corrected with either glasses or covering the eyes for a period. This is generally noticed in snow blindness or when the eyes are uncovered on severe bright days or "World's Fair" visiting. In the latter case this was caused by the riot of colors on the buildings and the continuous entering and leaving buildings which contained only artificial light. The difference in artificial light and sunlight, coupled with the wide array of colors, caused an eye strain which made the use of colored glasses practical.

Here again we have something that may call for attention. On account of the wide arrangement of visible color at the fair, and other reasons which I have mentioned, it is best to use sun glasses of the black, blue, blue-green or green variety rather than the popular amber. Glasses of these colors are valuable for this purpose, as they aid the visual blue in breaking up the various light rays and will not cause headaches or eye fatigue, as was commonly noticed during last year.

Scar Operations.

A. S. writes: When a child of 4 I was operated on the throat and there remains an ugly scar. I am now 18, at an age where appearance counts, so I have decided to have it covered with another layer of skin.

Would you advise this to be done? Will the after effects be noticeable?

Reply.

Operations to remove scars are not dangerous, as a rule. They are successful, as a rule.

As to any given case the advisability of operation, including chance of success, safety and the possible improvement in appearance, depends upon conditions present in that case.

Harlow Melts Iceland's Igloos, Wail Critics of U. S. Sinnemas

Yugoslavs Remain Away From Bad Land of Dillinger.

By Harry Ferguson.

Dear old Hollywood is in trouble again on account of foreigners complaining that gangster pictures are making Dillingers out of French kids and that Harlow's necking is melting all the igloos in Iceland.

At the Department of Commerce they have a whole section devoted to motion pictures, and you sure can get the low-down on how the boys and girls of Hollywood get along when they start falling into each other's arms on alien screens.

Ruby Keeler and her tap dancing are a smash hit in Rangoon, and whenever one of her operas comes to town the Burmans flock to the ticket office and plank down four annas, which is 20 cents in our language. They can take Norma Shearer or leave her alone.

The people who are maddest at Hollywood are the Chinese and the Yugoslavs. From our consulate in Yugoslavia comes the information that people are afraid to come to America because they gather the idea from our movies that Capone and Dillinger have divided up the U. S. A. between them and that Edward G. Robinson has quite a bit to say about how the country is run.

The Chinese are velly, velly weary of seeing Warner Oland dress up in a pigtail and go Fu-Manchuing across the screen. They claim there aren't any Fu-Manchus in China. The Chinese got so mad that they went out and found themselves a Chinese Garbo—a lassie by the name of Miss Butterfly Wu. She made an epic entitled "Two Sisters" and 130,000 people saw it in Shanghai. Let that be a warning to Hollywood.

Down in Colombia they like Tom Mix and Harlow. If Hollywood could contrive to put Harlow in a cowboy opera, it would run indefinitely in Bogota. They have a funny way of showing pictures down there. If the audience begins hissing after about 15 minutes, they stop the show and start a new picture.

Over in Rumania they like to see people sin in penthouses. Shearer goes over in a big way in Bucharest; Carole Lombard does right well; Ruth Chatterton is fair to middling, and Warren William is quite a gent with the Rumanian gals.

Ireland is very tough for Hollywood, having about the strictest censorship of any country. They go for stuff like the "Three Little Pigs," but out of every ten Sinnemas sent to Dublin the censors turn thumbs down on four.

But Chile—Ah, friends, there is a country for you. They like sex, shooting and throat-cutting. And, unlike the French, the Chileans don't flock to American movies and then rush out to the sidewalk cafes for a drink and a couple of hours of denouncing. The Chileans just drink.

Park Sandboxes Pass Tests For Germs, Are Ruled Safe

The Public Health Service gave official approval yesterday to sandboxes for children in Capital parks, following an investigation to determine whether they are safe from a sanitary standpoint.

Samples of sand were taken from the boxes at Dupont Circle and Franklin Park, which bear a heavy children's traffic, and from the sand in storage at the park yard. Dupont Circle sand passed the bacteriological test with a better grade than Franklin Park, but the latter was not held unsafe.

In his report, Dr. John McMullen, acting surgeon general, said the only real danger for children mingling in sand piles is the possibility of transmitting infectious diseases, like measles, by direct contact. He recommended, however, that sand be renewed at intervals, pointing out it could be washed and used again.

Dr. McMullen also reminded Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, who instituted the test, that the sandboxes in Dupont Circle and Franklin Park are shaded and deprived of the sun's sterilizing action.

Board Meeting In Arlington Held Illegal

However, Officials Approve Pay Roll; Ouster Test Is Awaited.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

New tangles developed rapidly yesterday to plague the majority members of the Arlington County board, which, last Tuesday, ousted the two minority members, B. M. Smith and Col. C. B. Garnett, and immediately elected their successors on the ground that the board alone had authority to fill vacancies.

Mr. Smith and Col. Garnett had been appointed to the vacancies by Circuit Judge McCarthy.

Meantime, Chairman Lyman Kelley issued a statement in which he said he welcomed the suit to be filed by the ousted members to test the legality of the board's action.

The first new development came when a special meeting of the board yesterday was declared illegal by Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas, who asserted the meeting was not properly called and that a legal quorum was not present.

Approves Pay Roll.

Despite this ruling, the board approved the Federal emergency relief pay roll of $706.10, presented by Mrs. Mae E. Jacobs, local administrator. Col. Charles T. Jesse, county treasurer, had refused to disburse any funds until such action was taken by the majority board members, Chairman Kelley, Fellows and Magruder. Mr. Fellows was not at the meeting.

Without waiting for the written legal opinion, which Attorney Douglas said he would submit, the board adjourned. After the meeting, Mrs. Jacobs said she was authorized by the local welfare board to take care of employes whose pay thus is held up.

In his opinion, Attorney Douglas said:

"As I have stated, it is my opinion that Board Members B. M. Smith and Col. C. B. Garnett, appointed a year ago and six months ago, respectively, by the Circuit Court, are now legally constituted members of the board. Regardless of the ultimate determination of the question which has been raised as to the right of the Circuit Court to fill vacancies on the board, those vacancies have been filled by a court of competent jurisdiction. The only legal and orderly way in which the action of the court can be brought into question lies in presenting the issue to the court of last resort of this State. Until the action of the Circuit Court has been set aside by this superior tribunal, it remains in full force and effect, and is therefore clear to me that any action now taken by this board must recognize the fact that Smith and Garnett are legal members."

Attorney General Quoted.

Another development in the tangled situation came when Col. Garnett made public a letter he received from Abram Staples, attorney general of Virginia, on whose opinion the board based its action in ousting the two members. In part it said:

"The opinion was rendered in response to a letter from the chairman of the board, a copy of which is inclosed.

"You will observe from the inclosed letter that it would naturally create the impression that there was either a vacancy existing or one impending, and that this office was asked for an opinion to guide the board in filling the vacancy. There was no intimation that there was any intention to contest an authority which already had been exercised in filling the vacancy. If such had been the case, no opinion would have been rendered from this office, because it now appears that the court already had rendered its own decision as to the powers of the board to fill the vacancy. This office does not assume to render an opinion which could be construed as having the effect of undertaking to overrule the decision of the court."

Kelley Welcomes Suit.

The third development of the day was a statement by Chairman Kelley in which he said in part:

"I welcome the chance presented by the mandamus petition of Smith and Garnett for a prompt and final legal adjudication on the recent action of the board in filling the vacancies in its membership. The suit is being filed in the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, the highest court which can pass on the matter. We shall join in requesting that the issue raised be set for immediate hearing and we hope and believe there will now be a final decision of the court within 30 days. I have every confidence that the action of the board will be upheld by the court.

"Fortunately for the people of the county, the sewer development program now seems, for the first time in many months, assured of execution without delay. The efforts on the part of certain persons to seize upon the recent action of the elected members of the board as constituting a threat to the work is only a continuation of their efforts which already have served to delay the sewer work for a period of several months, and which for a time endangered the entire project.

"The Commonwealth's attorney seemingly has sought to delay the sewer project by refusing his approval of acts of the board taken in accordance with recommendations of the expert and impartial engineers employed in connection with the work, despite the fact that the work of these engineers and the contracts awarded by vote of the three elected members have met with hearty approval of the officials of the PWA.

Cites Legal Opinion.

"The recent action taken by the elected members of the board in filling the vacancies caused by the resignations of John C. Call and Fred A. Gosnell was declared to be their duty by the attorneyl general, whose ruling clearly supersedes that of the Commonwealth's attorney. The action also was taken with the full approval and concurrence of the legal division of the PWA and Thomson, Wood and Hoffman, the New York attorneys, whose opinion sustaining the validity of the sewer bond issue was relied upon by the PWA in its final approval of the loan of $2,500,000.

"The people need have no fear that the sewer project is endangered, as the work will go on without delay. Edmund D. Campbell and J. L. May, the newly appointed members, have given their pledge of their support.

"The real issue involved, which certain people seem to seek to becloud, is the return of the government of Arlington County to its representatives who have been elected by vote of its people, instead of having it in the hands of persons appointed by an official who is in no sense responsible to the people. The Legislature of Virginia saw this issue clearly when it provided for the filling of vacancies in city councils by vote of the remaining elected members, and in applying to Arlington County, which is in every sense a city, the same standards of popular government. I am confident that the action of the elected members of the board in this instance has met with approval of the great majority of the people of the county, and I am equally confident that it was the legal duty of the board to take the action it has taken.

"If certain persons in the county now seek to becloud these fundamental issues, or threaten to take steps which they claim will still further delay our sewer project, I am confident that the people will not be deceived by such tactics and will place the responsibility squarely where it belongs, keeping in mind events of the past."

Brentwood Adopts New Budget Plan

Monthly Report Aimed to Keep Within Outlay.

The Mayor and Council of Brentwood have adopted a monthly budget system whereby the treasurer will report at the end of each month any difference in expenditures for the month, over or under the monthly budget figures. This system was resorted to in an effort to adhere more strictly to the budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Clerk E. W. Baker announced receipt of a letter from the State Department at Washington advising him that the Executive order of 1923 permitting Federal employes residing in Brentwood to hold municipal office has not been superseded and that it is still in effect.

William C. Keefer, a local business man, has announced his candidacy for the third ward seat in the Town Council. John McClary, it is understood, will seek reelection. Tomorrow all residents qualified to register may do so at the council chambers, Rhode Island avenue and Bunker Hill road, between 1 and 8 p. m.

Senator's Seat Fight Topmost In Florida Vote

Trammell, After Fourth Term, Is Opposed by Four Candidates.

Jacksonville, Fla., June 2 (AP).—The contest in which Park Trammell, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, seeks a fourth term as United States Senator and is opposed by four candidates, one a woman, heads the ballot for Florida's Democratic primary next Tuesday.

But in the campaign which has few exciting issues, attention of the electorate is just as sharply focused on three Congressional contests and an array of legislative and local races. A record registration for an off-year primary has been reported.

Trammell and five Congressmen—two unopposed—have based their plea for return to Washington on what they have done for Florida in Congressional halls and on their support of President Roosevelt. The State's reaction to Administration policies, however, is not an issue, as every Senatorial and Congressional candidate has expressed accord with the New Deal.

There is no gubernatorial contest this year.

One of the Congressional races—in the Fourth District, which sent Ruth Bryan Owen to Congress in 1928—finds another woman of National prominence, the widow of Richard Croker, of Tammany Hall, opposing the incumbent, J. Mark Wilcox, and Maj. Paul Crank, of Orlando.

Opposing Trammell are Charles A. Mitchell, of Vero Beach; Claude Pepper, of Tallahassee; James F. Sikes, of St. Petersburg, and Mrs. Hortense K. Wells, of Tampa.

In the Second District a three-sided contest finds R. A. Green, of Starke, seeking renomination over James R. Kelly, of Madison, and Wallace Sturgis, of Ocala.

Randolph Calhoun, of Sarasota, and W. T. Hall, of Leesburg, are attempting to oust J. Hardin Peterson, of Lakeland, from the First District post.

Congressmen Millard F. Caldwell, of the Third District, and W. J. Sears, State-at-large, are unopposed.

Voucher Tells How Documents Were Saved in Yorktown Siege

Revolutionary War Data Recount Removal and Asks Pay.

Yorktown, Va., June 2 (AP).—R. Floyd Flickinger, superintendent of the Colonial National Monument, today announced the discovery of a document which explains the preservation of the York County colonial records despite the widespread destruction of property during the 1781 siege of Yorktown.

The paper, found in the clerk's office by Charles S. Marshall, historical assistant, is a voucher itemizing the expenses incurred during February, 1783, by Maj. J. Nelson in moving the records of the York court from Dinwiddie County, where, apparently, they had been stored for safekeeping during the Southern campaign, to Williamsburg on the way to their place of deposit in York County.

Mine of Information

Long recognized as a mine of information for students of Colonial history, the York records are now being used in the Williamsburg restoration work sponsored by John D. Rockefeller, jr., and in the historical program of the Colonial National Monument at Yorktown.

The manuscript just brought to light reads:

York County to J. Nelson Dr.
To 13½ days Wasson hire for removing the records of the court from Dinwiddie County to Wmsburg at 2 dollars pr day 8/ 2/0 to 13½ bushels of corn furnished at 3/ pr bushel 2 0/6 to crossing two ferries with Wasson one dollar each 0/ 12/ 0: Total, 10/14/6. Pay 83
It is endorsed:
Maj: Nelsons Acct
V
The County

Special Assessment.

This Maj. J. Nelson was probably Maj. John Nelson, son of Thomas Nelson, who for many years was Secretary of State for the Virginia Colony, Superintendent Flickinger said.

That a special assessment was required to pay this bill and others against the county is suggested by the legend of the bundle of papers in which the manuscript is found: Vouchers to the levy laid December 31, 1784.

During the war Between the States the York records were preserved through the energy of Bolivar Shield, clerk of York County, who, on McClellan's approach toward Yorktown during the peninsula campaign, put the manuscripts on a sloop and took them away from the place of danger.

Deeds Tell of Houses.

Mr. Flickinger said the court books are of unique value in that the deeds, wills and inventories often contain valuable information which, when correlated, make possible accurate reproductions of colonial dwellings.

An index to the wills and inventories for the period from 1633 to 1833 is nearing completion, making the material in the records available for research work.

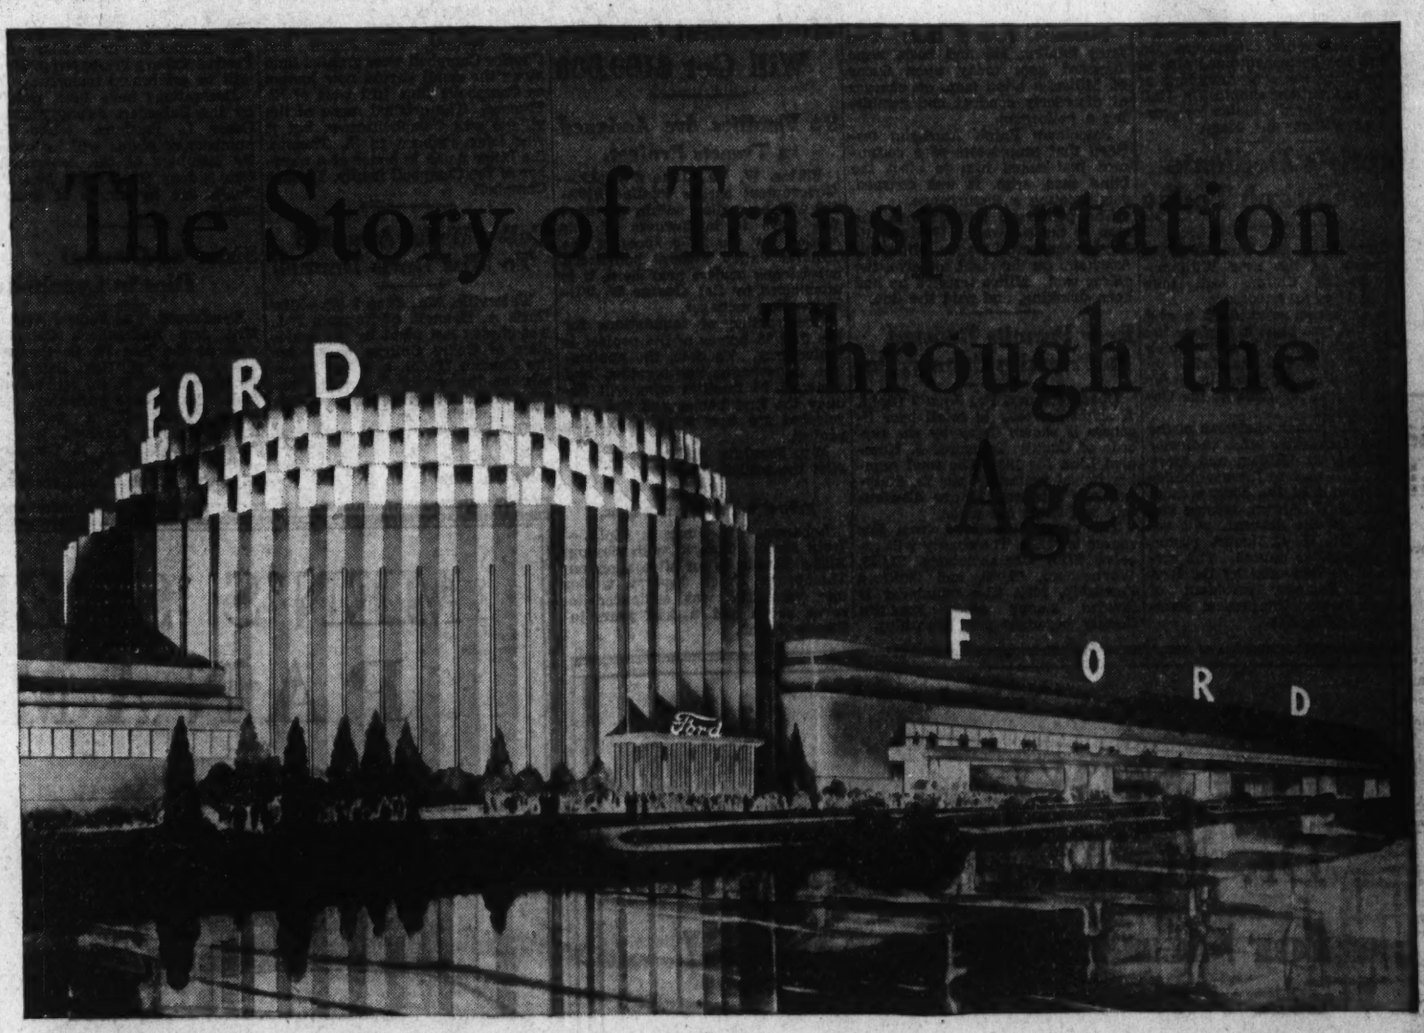
THE FORD DRAMA OF PROGRESS



The Ford Motor Company invites you to visit its exposition at A Century of Progress, Chicago, where the absorbing story of Ford men, methods and ideals has been unfolded beneath a single roof.

THE Ford Exposition is dominated by a tower ten stories high, in the center of which is an open court. Through the top of the rotunda, the sun's rays pour down upon a twenty-foot rotating globe — its surface bearing in relief the myriad units of the Ford industries.

Grouped about the Ford globe is a pageant of transportation, from the earliest Egyptian chariot, crude ox-carts and covered wagons to automobiles of varied age, type and design. A "Roads of the World" exhibit faithfully reproduces the roads upon which these vehicles traveled, from the earliest dawn of history.

Around the walls of the tower, behind the display of vehicles, appears a photographic mural covering 12,000 square feet.

In the south wing Henry Ford personally has prepared a display which centers about the humble shop in Detroit where he worked and experimented forty-odd years ago and where the first Ford car was built. The car itself — the first of millions — is a part of the exhibit.

Surrounding the Ford workshop is a series of displays which sharply etch the advance from the cruder machinery of other days to the almost wholly automatic machine shop of today. It is the story of "a hundred years of mechanical progress."

In this story of advancement are imprints of Henry Ford's own career. Many devices in the display came into being through Mr. Ford's efforts, or through exigencies created by his insistent drive toward improvement and increased efficiency in every mechanical operation.

Beside the Ford Exposition Building stands the gray, weather-beaten barn in which Henry Ford worked and played as a Michigan farmer boy. Its presence is peculiarly significant, because it has been equipped with machinery to illustrate how the farmer may process raw materials for industrial uses and bring about a mutually profitable relationship between industry and the farmer.

Suppliers Join Ford in Educational Exhibit

Twenty-one of the suppliers who manufacture Ford V-8 parts have joined with the Ford Motor Company in the industrial exhibits to make them complete and informative. Each exhibit begins and ends upon the same two keys — the first that every part of the Ford car comes from the earth. The second is that each part, from the smallest bolt to the heaviest steel part, must pass individual tests to make sure it is up to the Ford standard of quality.

The Grand Concourse of the Ford Building. Shown here is a priceless collection of vehicles of transportation of all time, from the ancient Egyptian chariot to the automobile of today.

From Mine to Finished Automobile Parts

The sources of iron, steel, copper, aluminum, zinc, lead and other metals are graphically portrayed. Exhibits depicting the processes that are used in manufacturing parts from these metals are actually at work producing the finished parts.

A program of symphony orchestra music has been planned for the Ford Exposition to last throughout the summer months. Opening the musical program will be the Women's Symphony Orchestra of Chicago, directed by Miss Ebba Sundstrom. The Women's Symphony will close a one-week program June 13th. An afternoon and evening concert will be given daily.

On June 16th the Detroit Symphony Orchestra will begin a series of daily concerts to continue for twelve weeks. Under the baton of Victor Kolar the Detroit Symphony will give a two-hour concert each afternoon and evening of the week.

The Ford Exposition Building is illuminated at night by hidden batteries of lights. These lights, playing upon the central tower exterior, produce an effect of great beauty. Straight up from the tower is a mighty beam of light furnished by searchlights with a combined strength of 600,000,000 candle-power. It is visible for many miles, and for hundreds of miles to airplanes.

Hall, Pollard Are Mentioned As W.-M. Head

Gaines, Bane and Bryan Also Discussed for Post.

Richmond, June 2 (AP).—Five men were mentioned prominently here today as possible successors to the late Dr. J. A. C. Chandler as president of the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg.

They were Dr. Sidney B. Hall, Dr. John Garland Pollard, Dr. Francis P. Gaines, Frank Bane and John Stewart Bryan.

The William and Mary board of visitors is scheduled to meet in Williamsburg next Saturday. Dr. J. H. Dillard, rector, and other members were here this afternoon for the burial of Dr. Chandler, who died in Norfolk Thursday.

Dr. Hall, now State superintendent of public instruction, and Dr. Pollard have been mentioned previously in connection with the college presidency, but the other three were added to the list today.

Dr. Gaines now is president of Washington and Lee University at Lexington.

Mr. Bane formerly was Virginia's Commissioner of Public Welfare. He now is a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago and director of the American Welfare Association. His active service as head of the Virginia Welfare Department terminated when he was loaned by Gov. Pollard to the first Federal relief organization during the Hoover Administration. There he served as assistant to Col. Arthur Woods, who is the director of the philanthropic activities of John D. Rockefeller, jr.

Mr. Bryan is a Richmond publisher and has served on the William and Mary board of visitors for a number of years. He is vice rector.

Dr. Pollard, who now is chairman of the new Federal Veterans' Appeal Board and a former Governor of Virginia, is on leave of absence from the William and Mary faculty. Before he became Governor he was dean of the Marshall-Wythe School of Government and Citizenship. Dr. Pollard has been mentioned also as a possibility for superintendent of public instruction, should Dr. Hall become the board's choice for president of William and Mary.

Baptists Dedicate New Church Today

Williamsburg, Va., June 2 (AP).—Dedication of the new Williamsburg Baptist Church will take place at 11 a. m. tomorrow.

The structure, erected at a cost of $100,000, was built to replace the church—standing since 1856—which was taken over and demolished by the restoration interests in order to make room for some of the Colonial projects.

Dr. D. J. Blocker, chairman of the building committee and professor of sociology at William and Mary College, will present the new building on behalf of the congregation. Dr. George W. Brown, trustee and chairman of the deacons, will accept it. Dr. W. C. James, pastor, will dedicate the church. The sermon will be delivered by the Rev. John R. Sampey, president of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky.

Year Book at Mercersburg Dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge

Mercersburg, Pa., June 2 (Spl.).—At a luncheon gathering yesterday in Keil Hall at Mercersburg Academy, a copy of the academy yearbook, the Karux, was presented to Mrs. Calvin Coolidge to whom it has been dedicated.

Mrs. Coolidge, a member of the board of regents, was unable to be present, being fog-bound in North Carolina, but the book was given to Dr. Joel T. Boone, vice president of the board, who will present it to Mrs. Coolidge.

The dedication reads:

"The boys of the Mercersburg Academy most respectfully dedicate this annual book of the school to Grace Coolidge, a Mercersburg mother and regent, a graduate of the University of Vermont, recipient of the highest honorary degrees in American life, trusted counselor of many noble enterprises, in simple private life or exalted public station always the same genuine, gentle, gracious spirit.

"She openeth her mouth with wisdom and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

At the luncheon meeting also was made the award of the class of 1932 alumni plaque, which is given to that alumnus of the academy chosen by a committee for character, service and achievement since his departure from the campus. The plaque was awarded this year to Junius Parker Fishburn, of the class of 1914 of Roanoke, Va. Last year it was awarded to Dr. Boone and in 1932 to Dr. George Leslie Omwake, of the class of 1895, president of Ursinus College.

Dunham Loses Ballot Battle

Board Refuses to Place Republican Candidate on Ticket.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 2 (Spl.) Ballot commissioners, with the Republican member dissenting, decided they were without authority to place the name of Amos Dunham, Republican, upon the ballot for the primary in August as candidate for the Berkeley County court.

Dunham sought to file for the place to which J. C. McKown was appointed by Gov. H. G. Kump when the election contest between McKown and William M. Johnson, Republican, turned on a tie after court appeals, and Berkeley County court, divided politically, was unable to agree upon a man. The Governor named McKown "for the term to which he expired" (a full term of six years).

The Dunham action was avowedly launched upon the contention that the Governor had authority to appoint only until the next general election, which occurs this fall.

Baltimore, June 2 (Spl.).—Two fines totaling $15 and costs were imposed here today upon Oscar H. Miller, a blind man, on charges of disorderly conduct and assaulting a policeman.

The policeman said he took the man to the sidewalk. While waiting for the patrol wagon, Miller bit Amrheim on the right forearm, the officer said. Miller testified he had been drinking, and paid the fine.

2 Hagerstown Projects to Put 300 to Work

$400,000 Hospital, New Sewer System to Be Started Soon.

Hagerstown, Md., June 2 (Spl.).—Two public works projects, expected to get under way here within the next 30 days, will give employment during most of the summer and fall to 300 men.

Architects completed plans yesterday for the $400,000 Washington County Hospital Building, a loan for which has been granted by the Public Works Administration.

The new hospital, which will be a five-story structure in the rear of the present hospital, will provide employment for 200 men for about nine months. The present hospital building will be remodeled and used for administration offices and one section will be the headquarters for all health activities in Washington County. Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer, and his staff will be quartered there.

The other project, bids for which were asked yesterday, is Williamsport's new sewerage system. These bids will be opened June 19 and work will be started within a few weeks. Williamsport was authorized some weeks ago to issue $88,000 bonds for the system.

Town to Celebrate Early Land Grants

Chambersburg, Pa., June 2 (Spl.).—Inasmuch as this year marks the two-hundredth anniversary of the first legal land grants to settlers in the vicinity of St. Thomas, Franklin County, plans are being made to observe this anniversary with a community celebration.

It is proposed to have the annual ox-roast at the same time and to make the occasion of the bicentennial and ox roast a general homecoming. The tentative dates are August 2, 3 and 4.

It was in July, 1734, according to early records, that James and Charles Campbell were granted land along the small stream now known as Campbells Run, just west of St Thomas. The original name of the village was Campbellstown, but it was later changed to St. Thomas, the latter name in honor of a member of the Campbell family, Thomas Campbell.

Clayton Walters, who was with Willis, testified at the preliminary hearing before Magistrate A. J. Tavenner today that Willis struck O'Neal, carried the latter on his bumper for 35 feet and drove off with the remark, "We must have killed him."

Relief Budget Must Be Sliced

Maryland Official Sounds Warning to Aids.

Baltimore, June 2 (Spl.).—Warnings were issued today by Maryland relief officials that the State's expenses for relief purposes during June must be reduced one-third from the May total.

A deficit of $300,000 during May in relief funds makes the reduction order necessary, it was said by H. M. G. Wilkins, auditor of the State relief administration. This deficit is to be spread over several months, so that the State can enter the autumn with a clean slate.

Of the $1,500,000 advanced yesterday by the Federal Government for relief purposes in Maryland, about $1,350,000 will be available this month, Mr. Wilkins said. Over $120,000 has been earmarked for the relief of Maryland oystermen and crabbers, whose equipment was damaged by storm, August, 1933.

In May, Mr. Wilkins said, the approximate sum spent for relief purposes was $1,860,000.

Virginia Starts Mail Order Rum Sale Tomorrow

Liquors to Be Shipped in 1-Gallon Lots to Any Section of State.

Richmond, June 2 (AP).—Mail-order liquor will become available to Virginians Monday, the State Alcohol Beverage Control Board announced tonight.

Under the new distribution plan, residents of communities which have no State liquor dispensaries in or near them may order by mail from the board's central office here.

Liquors will be shipped in lots up to 1 gallon on receipt of a certified check or money order for the board retail price of the merchandise plus 50 cents express charge.

Shipments will be made by express and the 50-cent charge will apply alike to all quantities from 1 pint to 1 gallon. It will be uniform for all parts of the State. The figure was arrived at by averaging the express rates to all Virginia points and basing the amount on the average purchases made by single customers in the State stores now open.

The result of the new system will be to make ABC board liquor available to all Virginians not forbidden to buy it, whether they reside in "wet" or "dry" counties, cities or towns. The board regards the move as a body blow to the already tottering bootleg profession.

Following a conference between board members and insurance experts today, the board devised an insurance plan by which agents of record were appointed for fire, casualty and bond risks. They are to report each month to the director of the division of real estate and insurance.

On the advice of the State Department of Insurance and Banking, the board will designate the companies with which insurance will be placed. The commission on all insurance is to be placed in a trust fund and at the end of 12 months the board will appoint a committee of three to determine the proper percentage of the gross commission to be paid each agent of record.

Judge Keedy, Of Hagerstown, Is Dead at 76

Funeral Rites to Be Held From Residence Tomorrow.

Hagerstown, Md., June 2 (Spl.).—The funeral of former Judge Martin L. Keedy, 76, of the fourth Maryland Judicial Circuit, who died unexpectedly at his home here today, will be held from his home tomorrow afternoon.

The former jurist, who has been in failing health for several years, was stricken two weeks ago after attending the funeral of his only son, Charles C. Keedy, of Wilmington, Del.

A former school teacher here, Judge Keedy was admitted to the bar in 1883 and elected States attorney for Washington County the same year. In 1889 he was elected to the House of Delegates, and in 1894 was elected Mayor of Hagerstown and reelected two years later.

In 1896, he was defeated for the Republican nomination for Congress in the Sixth District by George L. Wellington, and in 1903 was elected associate judge for 15 years.

He is survived by his wife, the daughter of the late Rev. J. B. Stitt; a daughter, Mrs. S. Mitchell Fockler, and sister, Mrs. Joseph Adams, of Baltimore.

Virginia Liquor Revenues Held Key to Deficit

State Officials Plan to Keep Expenses Below Their Appropriations.

Richmond, June 2 (Spl.).—Liquor revenues today were being viewed as the key to the State's immediate financial future as department heads, in response to the Governor's order, prepared to keep their expenses at least 5 per cent below appropriation levels for the fiscal year 1934-35.

The 5 per cent reduction, the maximum allowed under the 1934 budget act, is expected to save $750,000, but it will not prevent most State employes from obtaining slight salary increases provided in the budget.

The cut is being imposed to meet the deficit that has been foreseen for months. It was estimated in January that the deficit would be about $2,131,000 on June 30, but it may be as much as $2,600,000.

In making up the new budget, the Assembly hoped for liquor revenues in excess of an estimated $1,675,000, and beer revenues of about $400,000. If these estimates prove low the Governor may find himself able to discontinue the 5 per cent slash.

The five Richmond liquor stores have been doing an average daily business in excess of $1,500. If the 100 State stores, which the alcoholic beverage control board expects to establish, maintain even half this average, revenues from store sales alone will net the treasury more than $2,300,000. This does not count profits from wine and receipts from license fees, nor does it count excise receipts from beer.

Record Drop In Birth Rate Is Disclosed

Population Experts Are Concerned as 1933 Sets New Low.

(Associated Press.)

A plunge in the United States' birth rate—certain to carry the 1933 figure to a new low, and still dropping—was disclosed yesterday by the Bureau of Vital Statistics.

"We did not expect a decrease as rapid as it is," said Dr. Timothy F. Murphy, chief of the bureau. "A situation thought to have extended over a long period of years has been hastened."

Margaret Sanger, veteran birth control exponent, was quick to call the declining birth rate a general boon as well as a triumph for her cause.

"The birth rate can well afford to go down," she said. "On the basis of the enormous population increase of the past, the birth rate must be lowered. A decreased birth rate doesn't mean a population decrease. Fewer babies are born, but with much less infant mortality, there is a better rate of survival."

Taking a different point of view, several population experts, among them Dr. Louis I. Dublin, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., and Dr. O. E. Baker, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, consider the drop a decidedly serious matter.

To make sure he is seeing the declining birth rate straight, Dr. Murphy will ask corroboration of State and provincial health officers when they meet here this week.

The drop has been from 25.1 births per 1,000 population in 1915 to 17.4 in 1932.

Dr. Murphy partly agreed with the theory put before the recent social workers' convention in Kansas City—that the decline was due to voluntary control of conception.

"But there are other important factors, too," he said. "The number of marriages goes down in a depression. Parents are separated by economic pressure. Immigration restrictions have cut off the large influx of southern Europeans who have large families."

Liner's Steward Held As Texas Murderer

Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, June 2 (AP).—Robert Jones, steward on the liner Lady Nelson, was arrested here today by Colonial detectives on request of United States authorities. The arrest was requested on the strength of Jones' resemblance to Arthur C. Wilson, accused of murder in Texas.

Detectives boarded the Canadian liner when she arrived from Georgetown, British Guiana, where the young steward had been closely questioned, maintaining that he was not Wilson.

Science Reveals Test to Foretell Sex of Children

By Howard W. Blakeslee.

Boston, June 2 (AP).—A new method of foretelling the sex of unborn children which has forecast correctly 242 boys and 158 girls is described in an announcement at Boston University.

If the baby is to be a boy, a small pink spot appears on the mother's forearm, a color indicating that nature's choice is contrary to the custom in some parts of the United States of sending gifts "blue for a boy, pink for a girl."

The pink spot appears after a hypodermic. The color for girls is white, that is, no "reaction" appears after the needle.

The test was devised by Dr. Max Davis, instructor in obstretrics and bynecology at the school of medicine. The experiments have been under way for several years. The total prospective mothers tested was 468. The accuracy in this number was 82.3 per cent for male children and 89.6 per cent for females.

Trails in Adirondacks Closed as Fire Rages

Albany, N. Y., June 2 (AP).—Trails in the dense Adirondack forest, menaced by the worst fire conditions in years, were deserted tonight except for watchful fire wardens, as New York State clamped on an emergency order against leaving traveled roads.

State police, wardens and rangers guarded the woods, excluding all persons in compliance with an emergency order from Gov. Lehman.

Quake Causing Water Shortage in Idaho

Boise, Idaho (U.P.).—Changes in underground strata, caused by an earthquake shock in northern Utah and southern Idaho early in March, were blamed by M. V. Leonard, Idaho State chemist, for an impending water shortage in southeastern Idaho.

Leonard reported that several springs in the section had gone completely dry and that the volume of water in others had been considerably lessened.

Wallace Tells Class Of Economic Clash

'Cooperation on One Hand, Rugged Individualism on Other,' He Says.

Logan, Utah, June 2 (AP).—The conflict between "cooperation on one hand, and rugged individualism on the other," must be solved through a willingness to "come and counsel together," Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, said in the commencement address at Utah State Agricultural College today.

"We are having a conflict between cooperation on one hand and rugged individualism on the other," he told the graduates. "From this may come a higher synthesis—a conflict between voluntary regimentation and Jeffersonian Democracy, from which may also come a higher synthesis."

He blamed the rapid growth of the United States and its development from a debtor into a creditor Nation for the economic condition in this country.

London Proves Hub Of Britain's Revival

London, June 2 (AP).—Greater London has become the hub of Britain's industrial revival. And while the depression continues to cast a black shadow across the "industrial north," sleepy old towns of the south are awakening to an activity they never knew.

Official evidence of these trends is furnished by a board of trade survey, which shows 463 new factories were opened in 1933 in England, Scotland and Wales.

America had a share in the development because 10 out of the 37 new concerns established by, or with the assistance of, foreign enterprise had American nationality.

REDUCTIONS AMOUNT TO AS MUCH AS $50 ON SOME MODELS

Chevrolet's reduced prices reflect in dramatic fashion the record breaking demand that, month after month, is keeping Chevrolet first in sales. Ritchie Speaks To Graduates At U. of Md.

6,000 Attend Exercises as 700 Students Are Given Awards.

"It is not how you spend public money, but what you spend it on," Gov. Albert C. Ritchie yesterday told the graduating classes of the University of Maryland.

The statement was brought out as the Governor traced the outstanding growth of the institution since the day the Baltimore and College Park units were united by a bill passed in his first term of office.

"Some people complain about the cost of government, and it is right to complain if the cost is not kept at a minimum. The money spent for the university has been spent on as fine a scientific and professional basis as money can be spent," he said.

"Eugenie" Ought to Afford Henry Ford Proud Thrill

Here's "Eugenie," who hauls the mail daily between Chesapeake Beach and Washington. Although she looks like a "cheesebox on a raft," Eugenie's Model T engine does its stuff and the mail goes through on time. Her one-man crew, Harry Klein, is seen chucking the mail aboard.

Model T Engine Carries Mail on 28-Mile Railroad.

By Robert F. Whitney.

"Eugenie" carries the mail.

Once a day this lady, who might be likened to "a cheese box on a raft" if she weren't more like a cracker box on wheels, makes a round trip between Chesapeake Beach and Washington.

But it's not right to take a lady to task for her personal appearance if she does her job well. And if there is beauty in utility, Eugenie is as pretty as any steam shovel that ever levelled a hill.

Eugenie's job is carrying the mail, and officials of the Chesapeake Beach Railway, for which she performs, say she couldn't do a better job if she were streamlined from pilot to rear coupler.

It was an accident that gave birth to Eugenie. Originally she was the railway inspection car, and sped along the 28 miles of track between the junction and the beach with a 2-cylinder motor to furnish the kick.

Cut in Service.

Last fall, when the railway cut down its regular service, she was fitted with a new model T Ford motor and her panelled superstructure built. Then she was pressed into service to carry the afternoon mail.

Needless to say, Eugenie made good. She can roll up to Washington, with her flanged wheels clicking the rail points a lively clip, and make the trip, including eight or nine stops, in 50 minutes.

Her one-man crew is Harry Klein. If you ask Harry how fast she can go, he will answer, "That depends on how fast you want to go." Pressed further, Harry, a former railroad conductor, will admit that she can beat the regular steam trains and can hit 50 miles an hour.

Then, after all, Eugenie isn't really ugly. She is merely the result of what anyone would expect by putting a Ford hood, plus a square body, on top a platform which rides the rails with four flanged wheels.

She Runs Both Ways."

In addition to all these things, Eugenie is a double-action mail car. If necessary she can go backwards the whole length of her run, because she is equipped with a high-speed reverse gear.

Officials of the road are so satisfied with the car's performance that they think she will be left on during the summer, even after additional regular service would make it possible for the afternoon mail runs to be taken by the trains.

The large railroads may have their electrification and their new stream-lined speed trains, and Eugenie won't be jealous. However, she puts in a big claim to being the smallest mail train in the world.

Shriners Hold Big Ceremonial

Two Thousand Members From Eleven Cities Join in Parade.

Baltimore, June 2 (Spl.).—More than 2,000 Shriners from 11 cities paraded here today to inaugurate the fiftieth anniversary celebration of Boumi Temple, of Baltimore.

Thousands of spectators applauded the colorful Shrine units. The band and the marchers of Khedive Temple, of Norfolk, Va.; Acca Temple, of Richmond, and Ali Ghan Temple, of Cumberland, Md., were accorded a lusty reception.

Heading the line of march were Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore, himself a Shriner, and Imperial Potentate John M. Sebrell, of Norfolk. At various points in the parade rode potentates from the participating temples.

A banquet and a circus performance tonight were scheduled. There will be an open-air Shrine concert tomorrow in Druid Hill Park. The three-day celebration will close on Monday with a banquet.

Children's Program Planned.

Under the direction of Mrs. Russell Lenhart, Miss Rebecca Leaman and Mrs. Harry Unglesbee, the children's day program of the Neelsville (Md.) Sunday School will be given at 8 p. m. next Sunday in the Presbyterian Church.

D. A. R. Will Dedicate Porch At 'Ye Coole Springs' Tuesday

Charlotte Hall Exercises to Be Combined With Memorial Rites.

Leanardtown, Md., June 2 (Spl.) Following commencement exercises at Charlotte Hall, historic Southern Maryland school, Tuesday, the Maj. William Thomas Chapter of the D. A. R. of St. Mary's County will dedicate a memorial porch at "Ye Coole Springs," famed three-century-old medicinal springs opposite the school grounds.

Exercises will begin at 5 p. m. with State and National officers of the D. A. R. in attendance. The chief speaker will be J. Alexis Shriver, of Baltimore.

The memorial porch, colonial in design, will commemorate noted presidents of the board of trustees and eminent divines of Charlotte Hall School. These include: The Right Rev. Thomas John Claggett, first president of the board of trustees of the school, and first Episcopal bishop consecrated on American soil; Col. John H. Sotheron and Truman H. Thomas, later presidents; the Rev. John W. Chesley, rector of All Faith parish; and the Right Rev. William Paret, late bishop of Maryland.

Nine pillars of the porch represent the faculty of the school: the Rev. Hatch Dent, first principal; the Rev. Neal Hamill Shaw, Phillip Briscoe, N. F. D. Brown, William Thomas Briscoe, Edward Tayloe Briscoe, Richard W. Sylvester, George McCubbin Thomas, James Francis Coad and Col. B. F. Crowson.

Present at the occasion will be Mrs. George P. Loker, regent of the local chapter of the D. A. R., and Mrs. Edward Croker, chairman of the memorial work at Coole Springs.

Since colonial times Ye Coole Springs has been a noted Maryland health resort. Recognized for its medicinal waters by an act of Assembly in 1698, it is believed to have been the first health sanitorium in the colonies. Today, the springs supply Charlotte Hall School, established in 1774, with drinking water.

Site of the springs since 1924 has been a D. A. R. memorial, with each of the five springs dedicated to a group of individuals whose lives have helped to make Maryland or National history. The memorial gateway to the springs is dedicated to Dr. Henry B. Thomas, an alumnus of Charlotte Hall and famed Baltimore physician.

Navy to Cenetr Summer Work About Norfolk

Two Private Airports Are Leased as Fleet Plans Battle Maneuvers.

Norfolk, Va., June 2 (Spl.).—Norfolk will be the center of Navy activities during practically the entire summer. Every airplane with the United States fleet which has just arrived in the Atlantic, after three years on the West Coast, will base at the Norfolk Naval Air Station.

To provide landing space for the planes, the Navy has leased for the summer the Norfolk Airport and the Tidewater Airport, two privately operated enterprises. In addition to these fields, the Navy has its own landing field at the naval base and an extra field known as East Camp, located just outside the reservation.

The fliers will engage in all kinds of maneuvers here. There will be battle practice and formation flying, night and day target practice and cross-country flights. Bombing planes, scouting planes and observation planes will take part in these maneuvers.

In addition to the aeronautical activities, the scouting force, composed almost entirely of cruisers, will spend a good part of the summer in Hampton Roads and off the Virginia Capes. These ships are scheduled to arrive here about June 24, although it is possible they will dock at an earlier date.

In the scouting force will be the newest 10,000-ton cruisers, Portland, Indianapolis and the New Orleans. The latter vessel is now on a foreign cruise, but is scheduled to return late in the summer. The battleships Arkansas and Wyoming, with the first and third class midshipmen from the Naval Academy on board, will join the force late in August and there will be target practice off the coast. The middies will have a chance to see and to participate at first hand in the firing and loading of big guns on modern sea fighters.

The airplane carriers Langley, Saratoga and Lexington, now with the fleet, and the new carrier Ranger will spend practically all of the summer here. The Ranger is to pay a short visit to New York and return to the naval base to join the other airplane craft.

Hearing Is Set In Frederick Bank Dispute

Court to Get Arguments Thursday on Depositor Dividend Plan.

Frederick, Md., June 2 (AP).—Chief Judge Hammond Urner and Judge Arthur D. Willard today set next Thursday for a hearing on the report of H. E. Meeks, chief examiner of the Maryland State Banking Department, giving an estimate of dividend to be paid 166 depositors who dissented from the reorganization of the Central Trust Co.

It is expected the court will review exceptions from both the dissenting depositors and the People's Liquidating Corporation, the latter sponsors of the reorganization, which calls for a new bank here and four State banks at Middletown, Walkersville, Sykesville and Poolesville in the place of the former Central Trust Co. of Frederick and 11 branch banks in Frederick, Washington, Carroll, Howard and Montgomery Counties, which closed their doors September 2, 1932.

In his report, Mr. Meeks listed claims aggregating $10,792,483.29 against the Central Trust Co. and assets appraised at $2,383,602.29. The assets included between 4,000 and 5,000 notes of individuals for $1,117,483.30, in some instances secured by mortgage on real estate and in other instances without actual security. Based on the appraisals, Mr. Meeks estimated a dividend of 22 per cent for the dissenting creditors.

Simultaneously with filing his report, the liquidating corporation, William J. Grove, chairman, filed exceptions to the estimate of the 22 per cent dividend, claiming it is too high. The dissenting depositors alleged that the appraisal dividend is too low and gave notice that they will file objections early next week. The dissenting creditors alleged that the appraisal of "zero" made in some of the bank's heaviest debtors is not justified.

Valuating the deposits of the objectors has delayed reopening of the new banks, it claimed by the liquidating corporation.

Heavy Plant Damage Bared

Result of Extreme Cold of Last Winter Is Revealed.

Ornamental plants throughout the country have suffered greatly by last winter's extreme weather, Walter R. Ballard, horticulturist at the University of Maryland, has announced.

Ballard said that as the flower season advances the damage becomes increasingly apparent. Hybrid tea roses have been among the heaviest sufferers. Most of these were killed, but are putting up vigorous growth from the base.

Climbing roses also have been injured more severely than was at first supposed and for this reason, they should be pruned two or three times.

Among the shrubs, the horticulturist pointed out, evergreen privet has been injured severely, although in most cases it is coming up from the base. In exposed places the ordinary privet hedge has been killed back extensively, and in such cases all dead and weak growth should be carefully removed.

Others which have been killed back to the base in many sections are the crape myrtle, the chaste tree (Vitex), and the butterfly bush. Flower buds on the wisteria, azaleas and hybrid rhododendrons also have been destroyed.

Coach Drowns Near Linthicum

George Baumgardner, 28, Dies as Youths Try to Save Him.

Linthicum Heights, Md., June 2 (Spl.).—George Baumgardner, 28, athletic coach and teacher at the Linthicum Heights Junior High School, drowned today in Lake Helen, near Linthicum, despite the efforts of seven youths to save him.

Baumgardner was attempting to swim across the lake and had almost reached the center, when he cried out that he had been stricken with cramps. He thrashed about in the water for a few moments and then started to sink.

Edward Heapy, who was swimming nearby, hurried to the rescue and reported Baumgardner seized him and was pulling him under when Heapy broke the teacher's hold in order to save his own life. Other youths swimming nearby, including Leonard Schroeder and John Harvey, who were Baumgardner's pupils, swam to the scene and finally succeeded in taking the unconscious teacher to shallow water.

Baumgardner was a graduate of Western Maryland College, class of 1930. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel H. Baumgardner, of Westminster; one sister, Catherine A. Baumgardner, and a brother, Joseph N. Baumgardner, at home.

Kleinmann Joins Pathology Staff At Virginia School

Richmond, June 2 (Spl.).—Dr. Hans Kleinmann, formerly of the University of Berlin and recently appointed associate in pathology at the Medical College of Virginia, reached Richmond today and was welcomed by President W. T. Sanger. Dr. Kleinmann, accompanied by Mrs. Kleinmann, landed yesterday at Baltimore.

In this city Dr. Kleinmann will work under Dr. Frank L. Appleby, giving special attention to both teaching and research work in the chemical field of pathology.

Dr. Kleinmann was one of the physician-teachers who lost his position at the University of Berlin last year as a result of political changes in Germany.

His connection with the Medical College of Virginia has been made possible by a grant of funds from the Rockefeller Foundation and the emergency committee of New York, in aid of displaced German scholars. For several months he has been residing in Paris, where he carried on research work at the University of Paris.

Ritchie's Foes Align to Battle 5th Term Plan

Resolution Seeks Platform Plank to Keep Governor From Succeeding Self.

Salisbury, Md., June 2 (Spl.).—Wicomico County Democrats overflowed their meeting place here last night in an anti-Ritchie demonstration resulting in the adoption of a resolution that Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore, be asked to include in his platform a plank prohibiting a governor from succeeding himself in office.

The resolution was introduced by Charles M. Freeman, prominent Eastern Shore banker, who said: "In my opinion, the time has come when the mass vote should register its own collective mind, regardless of endorsements made by so-called leaders pledging their wards, districts and counties to this or that candidate."

Districts of the county sent reports of constantly growing sentiment against the continuance in office of Governor Ritchie.

The assertion was freely made that Wicomico County will give fully 3,000 majority to the Democratic gubernatorial candidate who will oppose fifth-term aspirations of Governor Ritchie.

Seek Damages From Dead Woman's Fiance.

Virginia NRA Cases Are Easily Settled

Dr. Pinchbeck Reports 341 Adjusted.

Richmond, June 2 (Spl.).—Three hundred forty-one complaints of alleged violations of the NRA codes have been satisfactorily adjusted by the labor compliance department of the State NRA offices since that department was started, on February 24, Dr. Raymond B. Pinckbeck, State labor compliance officer, stated today.

There have been 481 complaints filed with the State offices, of which 440 were registered after the opening.

"All complaints have been adjusted without litigation," Dr. Pinchbeck said. "The employers of Virginia have been most cooperative. We have found it necessary to refer only one case to the State adjustment board."

W. & M. Plans Norfolk Section Development

Expansion Is Linked With Scheme to Conclude State Control.

Williamsburg, Va., June 2 (Spl.). Tentative plans for removal of the College of William and Mary from State control and support by endowment funds also contemplate the development of the Norfolk division along lines originally formulated by the late President J. A. C. Chandler.

The Norfolk Division, if a loan from the Public Works Administration materializes, will receive a substantial start toward new building plans and its expansion either, under State or private control, as the only institution of higher learning in the Tidewater area will be apparently assured.

While discussions of the proposal to take William and Mary from the State educational system and give it support from an endowmen of $8,000,000 to $10,000,00 have been largely informal, it appears assured that the ancient name of the college, dating back to the seventeenth century, when it was established by royal grant, will be retained under any circumstances.

The name of the College of William and Mary, the second oldest institution of high learning in the country, is one of its greatest assets.

Full details of the plan to end State control of William and Mary and support it by earnings from endowment funds have not been revealed.

Among the leading supporters of the plan is Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, rector of Bruton Parish Protestant Episcopal Church, credited with first having interested John D. Rockefeller, jr., in the restoration. Mr. Rockefeller is expected to provide a liberal portion of the proposed endowment fund.

Eastern Shore Schools Ready For Graduation

Class Activities Will Hold the Stage Throughout Next Fortnight.

By Louise Proctor Engle.

Nats Drop 12-Inning Battle to Red Sox After Beating Grove, 2-1; Cavalcade's Stretch Rush Wins American Derby by 2 Lengths

Record Falls In $25,000 Classic

Mrs. Sloane's Star Colt Beats Discovery and Singing Wood.

Returns $4.14 Mutuel; Mata Hari Sets Pace and Quits Early.

CHICAGO, June 2 (AP).—Charging through the stretch like a hurricane, Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloan'es Cavalcade, today galloped to impressive victory in the $25,000 added American Derby to thrill 30,000 spectators with his dramatic finish.

The Kentucky Derby winner by his victory equalled the achievement of Spokane of winning both the Kentucky classic and the American Derby in the same year, shattering tradition that spanned 45 years. Spokane won both races back in 1889.

Cavalcade, America's outstanding 3-year-old, with the 34-year-old Mack Garner on his back, smothered the field of nine with the ground-eating charge in the last quarter-mile to overcome Discovery and Singing Wood, which finished second and third, respectively.

Wins by Two Lengths.

Cavalcade bounded to victory by a margin of two lengths over Discovery, the entry of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, of New York, while Singing Wood, winner of the Withers mile at Belmont, was six lengths back of Discovery. Then came Plight, winner of the Texas Derby, with Patch Pocket, fifth, Bien Fait Sixth, and Mata Hari, the game little filly which set the blistering pace for nearly a mile, pulling up seventh. Anarchy, coupled with Calvacade was eighth, and Technocracy, last.

Cavalcade ran the 1¼ miles in 2:04, which clipped a fifth of a second off the Derby record, hung up by Mr. Khayyam in 1933.

Going to the post an even money favorite, the Brookmeade Stable entry of Cavalcade and Anarchy paid $4.14 to win, $2.62 to place and $2.70 to show. The place and show prices on discovery were exactly the same, $2.68, while Singing Wood returned $3.80 to show.

Victory Nets $23,310.

By his victory Cavalcade earned $23,310 for Mrs. Sloane, while Alfred G. Vanderbilt, owner of Discovery, received $3,000. The sum of $1,500 went to Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of New York, owner of Singing Wood, with $750 going to W. Sachsenmaier, owner of Plight.

In five races this season Cavalcade has participated in three record-breaking performances, stamping him as the outstanding 3-year-old of the year. He opened his campaign by tying a record at Havre de Grace, then broke a record in the Chesapeake Stakes, won the Kentucky Derby, finished second to his stablemate, High Quest, in the Preakness, and came on to win the American Derby in record time.

Frisch in 2,000th Ball Game Today

May Play in Eighth World Series This Fall.

St. Louis, June 2 (AP).—Frankie Frisch tomorrow will add his name to the list of those who have played in 2,000 major league baseball games.

Others have done it, among them Cobb, Speaker, Lajoie, Wagner and Fred Clarke, but the feat remains one accomplished only by the truly great of the diamond.

Frisch, in his first full season as manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, has hopes of playing in his eighth world series this fall. He played in four under the late John McGraw, and three since joining the Cardinals.

Since leaving Fordham University 15 years ago to join John McGraw's Giants, Frisch has stolen more than 400 bases—more than any other player in the game today. The all-time record is 892 by Ty Cobb. Only once since 1920, the 1932 season, did he fail to hit .300.

British Yacht Hope, Endeavour, Quits Race

Felixtowe, England, June 2 (U.P.).—Endeavour, the new yacht with which T. O. M. Sopwith hopes to lift the America's Cup, faced her first actual competition today, but nothing was proven. Along with her rivals Endeavour abandoned the race after going once around the 37-mile course.

The crack Velsheda, expected to give Endeavour the closest rub, smashed a boom and retired after going into an imposing lead soon after the start. Endeavour then held the lead throughout the first trip around the course, but, to the consternation of officials and surprise of the many spectators, she was wheeled over sharply and put into the harbor. The other boats followed.

Helen Jacobs Is Defeated In Final

Bows to Peggy Scriven; Crawford Is Upset by German.

PARIS, June 2 (AP).—In two surprising reversals of form, Helen Jacobs, United States titleholder, today failed in her fifth bid for the French hard court tennis championship, and Jack Crawford, Australian Davis Cup ace, went down to defeat in the defense of his singles crown on the Roland Garros courts.

Margaret (Peggy) Scriven, left-handed English star defending the title she won last year, packed too much power in her strokes for the American champion, defeating Miss Jacobs, 7—5, 4—6, 6—1. Crawford bowed to Baron Gottfried Von Cramm, of Germany, in a long-drawn-out five-set match. The scores were 6—4, 7—9, 3—6, 7—5, 6—3.

Three-Hour Match.

With Von Cramm and Crawford taking three hours to settle their argument, the Jacobs-Scriven match was finished in semi-darkness, with the American champion objecting to playing under such conditions. She was overruled, however, and ordered to continue play. At times in the final set Miss Jacobs appeared discouraged when her ordinarily accurate chop shots dropped outside the lines or plumped into the net.

Miss Jacobs, who also was a finalist in 1930, jumped into an early lead in the first set as she went to the net to gain a 4—2 lead. She then dropped back to the baseline, where she was no match for the English girl, who pulled up to 4—4, and then won her own service to take the lead for the first time. Miss Jacobs held her service to deuce the set, but Peggy also won her service and then broke through the American queen to take the set.

Miss Scriven continued to outride her opponent and took the first two games of the second set. But Miss Jacobs rallied and swept through the next four games only to have the defending champion come from behind again to knot the score. The American ace broke through Miss Scriven's service to take the lead again and then held her own to sqaure the match.

The English southpaw jumped away to a 3-to-1 lead in the final set, and Miss Jacobs protested against playing in the semidarkness. The officials ordered her to continue, however, and she dropped the next three games.

The accident occurred in the first inning of the first game of a scheduled double-header.

Terry's Single Nips Phils in 9th, 5 to 4

Giants Score After Tying Count in Eighth With Three Tallies.

NEW YORK, June 2 (AP).—Manager Bill Terry's ability to come through in a pinch today gave the Giants a 5-to-4 victory over the Phillies that was almost a duplicate of yesterday's triumph.

For the second time in succession the Giants won out in the ninth inning, with their pilot providing a single with the bases full to drive in the deciding tally. And for the second time that late rally came after Irvine Jeffries, the Phils' rookie second baseman, had put the visitors ahead with a homer. It was his second circuit swat of the season and came in the seventh inning with Mickey Haslin aboard to break a 1-to-1 tie.

Maryland U. Students Honor Rival of Boy Who Won Award

WHAT to do when a college has two outstanding athletes with Clark Gable personalities on and off the athletic field and only one prize to award?

It was a stickler for the University of Maryland's athletic board, but they plunged into their task with dauntless courage and selected Norwood Sothoron as the deserving young man for the Sylvester Trophy award, emblematic of the highest degree of athletic proficiency in the senior class.

There was no complaint concerning the board's choice, but the student's resolved that Bucky Buscher's prowess should not go unnoticed. Sothoron played football, basket ball and lacrosse—Buscher's sports were football, basket ball and baseball.

At the commencement ball Buscher received a handsome gold watch, purchased with contributions by admiring campus mates. One of the principal contributors to the fund was Sothoron.

U. S. Netmen Score Over Mexicans

Van Ryn Quits Team Due to Pressure of His Business.

BALTIMORE, June 2 (AP).—Frank X. Shields and Sidney B. Wood, a pair of tennis aces from New York, captured both their singles matches with Mexico today to give the United States Davis Cup team a 5-to-0 sweep of the series.

Shields took the inexperienced Angel Roldan into camp in easy fashion in the opening contest by 6—2, 6—1, 6—2 scores, but Wood was extended in the final fray.

Playing against Dr. Ricardo Tapia, the Mexican team captain, Wood had to use all his tennis tricks and experience to keep the Mexicans at bay in the first two sets. He won, 6—4, 9—7, 6—0, but he was perilously near losing the deuced second set more than once.

Today's matches gave the United States victory over Mexico without the loss of a set and sent the United States to Europe to meet the winner of the European zone series.

Van Ryan to Quit Team.

Elation at the straight-set triumph was somewhat tempered when R. Norris Williams, 2d, nonplaying captain, was advised by John Van Ryan that he would be unable to accompany the team to Europe.

Van Ryn, one of the world's best doubles players, had been assigned to team with Lott. Williams said that Van Ryn felt that he could not spare the time from his brokerage business in Philadelphia.

Williams said he had not decided on a doubles team definitely, but that the pair that defeated Mexico here, Lott and Lester Stofen, would be used at Wimbledon.

The Wood-Tapia match today was by far the best of the play here. Tapia apparently was determined to put all he had in the game to retrieve at least one set for the invaders. He was almost successful.

His cross-court back hand was particularly effective, and he consistently rushed the net to win points. His most determined bid came after Wood led in the second set by a 5-to-3 score. He captured his own serve, broke through Wood's with some beautiful placements and then followed with a sizzling service that brought him a love game.

Wood Evens Match.

He was not quite equal to the task, however. Wood evened the match at 6-all and when Tapia won his own serve again, repeated to make it 7-all. The hot sun and the fast pace began to tell and Tapia tamely dropped the two susequent games. The last set was a rout, with Tapia taking only eight points in the six games.

Shields had far too much for Roldan. After a slow start, in which Roldan took the lead at two games to one, Shields won five straight games to take the set and never had to exert himself thereafter.

Roldan, who was playing in his first Davis Cup match, showed streaks of brilliance but his general experience was not on a par with the American National champion's.

In the matches prior to today, Wood won from Esteban M. Reyes, 6—3, 6—2, 6—2, and Stoefen defeated Tapia, 6—2, 6—3, 6—1. Lott and Stoefen beat Tapia and Eduardo Mestre, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4.

British Title Is Won By American Poloists

Roehampton, Eng., June 2 (AP).—The hard-riding Aurora Four, invading American polo team, captured the Roehampton open tournament today, overpowering a team labeled the Panthers, 9 to 6, in the final contest.

Aurora, led by Seymour Knox, of Buffalo, N. Y., swamped its British rivals in three of the six chukkers, held them even in two others and trailed only in one.

Chapman's Hit Gives Yanks 9-8 Win

Macks Lose in 9th After Wasting Lead; Error Helps New York.

PHILADELPHIA, June 2 (AP).—The Yankees evened the series with the Athletics at a game apiece and went into a virtual tie with Cleveland for the American League lead as they pulled out a 9-to-8 victory in the tenth inning today.

After each had scored four runs in the first inning, the A's getting theirs off Johnny Broaca, the bespectacled Yale hurler who reported today, the Yanks put over three tallies in the ninth. That gave them a one-run lead after Bob Johnson had walloped his eleventh homer of the season, but they couldn't hold it.

An error by Pinky Higgins, allowing Pitcher Johnny Murphy to reach first, paved the way for the deciding run. A sacrifice and an infield out put him on third, and he scored on Ben Chapman's hit.

St. Paul's Franchise May Be Moved to Gary

Chicago, June 2 (AP).—The St. Paul franchise of the American Association may be moved to Gary, Ind., President Thomas J. Hickey revealed tonight.

"I plan to confer with R. J. Connery, president of the St. Paul Club, Tuesday at Milwaukee to discuss the probable change," President Hickey said. "Patronage of the St. Paul fans during the past few years has been so small that it is necessary that something be done about it. We have a chance to take it to Gary with prospects of getting far better patronage and crowds there."

Risko Is Hurt In Boxing Workout

Injures Eye Training for Brown Fight at Stadium Tomorow.

By Bill McCormick.

A DEEP gash, excavated over the left eye by George Pavlick in a spirited public training session at the Green Oaks Country Club yesterday, forced Johnny Risko, the Cleveland Rubber Man, to abandon further workouts for his important ten-round bout with Natie Brown at the Griffith Stadium tomorrow. Although the roly-poly Risko apparently ignored the injury, which resulted when Pavlick butted open an old cut, it is generally believed that the wound will hamper him considerably in his effort to hit the comeback trail by subduing the up-and-coming conqueror of Hans Birkie and Walter Neusel.

Shorn of all surplus avoirdupois and apparently in the finest physical fettle of his fighting career, Risko stepped into the practice ring yesterday to the accompaniment of an appreciative chorus of "ahs." Once in action, he demonstrated that something was gone from his boxing and, despite the fact that he has never shown to great advantage in the gymnasium, it was generally believed by those familiar with affairs fistic that he was far from the fighter who once wrecked the careers of, some of the leading heavyweights in the beak-busting business.

Halted in Second.

Working with a vengeance, Pavlick, who was scheduled as the first of his spar mates, popped him continually with a not-too-good left hand and landed plenty of looping right hands of the variety thrown by Brown, before the injury forced abandonment of the workout in the second round. Risko displayed all of his old aggressiveness, but just couldn't seem to get started against his lanky spar mate, who knew all the answers, insofar as rubbery, blubbery Jawn was concerned.

Against Steve Dudas, who looms as a potential "show-stealer," Natie Brown worked three rounds to perfection. Despite the constant imprekept imploring his charges not to cations of Billy McCarney, who go haywire, the two stood toe-to-toe and traded punches for three hot rounds, with Dudas finishing a not bad second.

Brown's highly educated left hook was working nicely and he banged home a stinging right just often enough to serve as a warning that he might be able to land that punch against Risko to terminate the proceedings tomorrow. Against the rugged and slow Chet Thomas, Brown threw punches with a vengeance, working nicely inside and looping rights and lefts with precision from long range.

Both Display Class.

In working out with Risko and Brown, George Pavlick and Steve Dudas, who will oppose each other in an eight-round semifinal, showed an abundance of class and promise that augurs well for the supporting feature. Pavlick is a cagey, smart defensive boxer, and Dudas displayed a million-dollar punch that may lay his opposition low.

Apparently trained to the minute, but not displaying publicly yesterday, the participants in the preliminaries were on hand in the roles of spectators. Roy Manley, the southpaw punching ace, who opposes Phil Furr in an eight-round main preliminary, is declared in the finest possible condition. In two sixes, Bob Turner meets Big Boy Smith and Joe Green will engage Pete Powell.

Advance sales for the show already have reached the unprecedented figure of $1,200.

Vines Beats Tilden For Net Pro Crown

Scores in Straight Sets at Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, June 2 (AP).—Ellsworth Vines defeated Bill Tilden, 6—3, 6—3, 6—4, today to win the men's Middle Atlantic professional tennis championship.

Tilden's service lacked its old-time severity and several errors in the opening set were traceable to his backhand. Vines frequently caught him out of position.

It was the second sectional professional tennis crown won by the young Californian within a week. Last Monday Vines defeated Martin Plaa, of France, for the Eastern States title.

Counter Attack by Nats Against Wes Ferrell Falls 3 Runs Shy.

Buddy Myer Is Hero as Thomas Shades Grove in Opening Battle.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

THE Nats and the Red Sox battled through five hours of baseball yesterday afternoon before a thrill-saturated gathering of 14,000 customers and succeeded only in marking time as far as results were concerned, dividing the spoils in the double-header proceedings.

The sharing of the loot was entirely satisfactory to the visiting ball players from Boston, who were staring a double defeat squarely in the countenance until the twelfth inning of the second game put in its appearance. Then came the sad denouement for Bobby Burke on the very threshhold of a pitching masterpiece. Hits, runs and errors flew thick and fast on both sides in that twelfth and the 4-to-4 tie that had existed leaped to the proportions of a 10-to-7 triumph for Boston.

Beat Grove in Opener.

In that first game, the Nats were confronted with the glory that was Grove and lifted Al Thomas to a 2-1 victory over the lath-like Boston southpaw in a pitching duel that saw the hitting of Buddy Myer balance the scales in favor of the Nats, while Thomas was surrendering only five safeties to the Boston folk.

But, getting back to that 12-inning second game, the 14,000 in the stands saw a battle that had all the elements of heart-failure even after the Red Sox clamped a six-run death-grip on the Nats in the twelfth to break up a pitching duel between Bobby Burke and Johnny Welch.

Cecil Travis, fitting appropriately into his clean-up hitting role, had tied the score for the Nats back in the seventh inning with a two-base hit into left-center field and then the battle wore on in scoreless fashion through four succeeding innings with Burke and Welch skipping from hole to hole with the grace of masters.

Kuhel's Error Costly.

But Burke couldn't get by that twelfth and a grievous error by Joe Kuhel helped to shove him over the brink of defeat. With one out, he yielded singles to Lynn Lary and Pinch-hitter Wesley Ferrell, and then it was that Kuhel started the Sox toward victory. The Nats' first baseman made a clever stop of Cissell's hard hop-

Kibitzer Repeats to Triumph in Charles Town Feature by 3-Length Margin

Gelding Goes To Front on Backstretch

Niggertoe Gets Second After Setting Early Pace in Struggle.

Pro Bono Third With Favored Gloritone in Fourth Position.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

CHARLES TOWN, June 2.—Kibitzer, which ate much oats and did little running at other tracks, proved that the mountain air really agrees with him by making it two straight victories today in winning the feature race at the Shenandoah Jockey Club's race track here. Kibitzer had won earlier in the week in rather handy fashion over a mediocre field and few thought that he had enough speed to cope successfully with such as Gloritone, Niggertoe and Pro Bono. But at the all-important finish, Kibitzer was breezing along three lengths in advance of Niggertoe, which was having trouble winning the place money from Pro Bono by a nose margin. Gloritone, with two straight feature races to his credit, could not even squeeze into the money.

Niggertoe was first to show in front as the field was sent away on the mile and a sixteenth struggle. Nisia and Kibitzer were close up, with Gloritone and Pro Bono among the trailers. Kibitzer dogged the heels of Niggertoe for a half-mile and then Edwards sent the gelding to the front on the back stretch. From that point to the finish, interest centered in the battle for second money.

The backers of Gloritone, who was running fairly close up, waited in vain for a stretch move from the mare. Despite a shaking up by Jockey Eddie Smith, Gloritone, racing under 118 pounds, would not increase her speed.

The daily double drew a big play and those who were lucky enough to parlay Hurry Bye and Mazyniata collected a $28.80 mutuel. The day's closest finish came in the sixth race when Rodius stuck a nose in front of Arab to take the decision as both came with a rush in the stretch.

Revamped Red Sox, Easy Last Year, Making Life Hard for Flag-Chasing Nats

Cronin to Use Whitehill Today

Southpaw Hopes to Stop Sox; Rhodes Listed as Mound Rival.

Kuhel Hurt in Pre-Game Practice; Rush From Bleachers Amuses.

By Frank H. Young.

LAST year much of the Nats' success in the pennant race was due to their ability to trim the Boston Red Sox most every time the two teams met. In their 21 meetings of 1933 the Washington club won 17, but it is different this year. By taking yesterday's night-cap game the Sox won one more than they took from the Nats all of last year—and the season still has a mighty long way to go.

Manager Bucky Harris and his charges will be in our midst again today, and a good Sabbath gathering is expected to turn out. Earl Whitehill, the dapper little southpaw, who held the Yankees hitless for 8 1-3 innings in New York Wednesday, will fling for the Nats. He probably will find Gordon (Dusty) Rhodes opposing him.

While playing catch with Travis and Cronin before the Nats' regular pregame infield drill yesterday, Kuhel was hit in the head and went down like a log. For a time, it looked as though the Nats' only first-sacker had been put out of commission. When he finally arose and attempted to take part in the regular fielding drill, he became dizzy and had to give up. Red Kress took his place while Trainer Mike Martin got busy with ice packs on Kuhel's head.

It was not known until game time, when Kuhel reported himself O. K., whether or not he would be able to take his place in the line-up.

There was considerable excitement in the press box during the Nats' half of the first frame of the opener when smoke was seen curling up from the rafters underneath. Quick use of the water cooler extinguished the baby blaze.

Berg and Kuhel hit two of the hardest drives in the second inning of the opener, when the Nats molded the first run of the game, but both were low liners headed directly at Johnson and Porter, respectively.

In the home fourth of the opener, with Berg on second and Buddy Myer up, Grove and his catcher had a conference. Then the lanky southpaw threw a two-base hit to Buddy. It was the latter's third successive safety in as many trips to the swinging block.

Between games the cash customers were furnished with some impromptu races—both mass and individual. First, at least a hundred youngsters jumped from the left-field bleachers and rushed to the covered stands. All of them made it, but the stragglers ran afoul of John Law and the ground-keeper's force, and most of them were caught, after a number of exciting races and chased back whence they came.

It looked like Werber would be credited with the shortest double in history in the second stanza of the night when Kuhel, tearing in, was unable to snare his pop-fly. Lary scored from third and the runner reached second before the ball could be run down. It was a foul, though, by reason of the ball taking a queer hop and skidding foul. Most of the fans seemed to be puzzled by the ruling, evidently forgetting that a ball which hits the ground must either stop rolling or pass first base in fair territory or it is foul.

Burke fanned three in the third inning of the second game, Lary and Welch after filling the bases with an intentional pass to Rick Ferrell. And in the seventh, he issued three unintentional passes which helped in the making of a run without the need of a hit. It's hard to figure Bobby out.

Reds Snap Streak, Defeat Cubs, 3 to 1

Ted Kleinhans Effective Until 7th Inning.

Cincinnati, June 2 (AP).—Cincinnati's Reds broke up two strings today by defeating the Chicago Cubs, 3 to 1.

They ended their own four-game losing streak and, in so doing, blocked the Cubs from their fifth straight victory.

Young Ted Kleinhans, making his first start as a Red pitcher, granted the Cubs barely a hit an inning until the seventh, when Brennan went to his rescue as three singles scored a run and left two on base with only one man out.

Pros May Dominate Play in National Open Championship at Merion This Week

Runyan Seen Best of Lot In Test

Winter Star to Find Self at Home With Shots; Little Favored.

GoodmanFacesObstacles in Title Path; Smiths, Sarazen Selected.

By Dave Herman.

AMERICA'S famous professional and amateur golfers will go on parade this week at historic Merion in the annual blue ribbon classic known for the past 37 years as the National open championship. One hundred and fifty of them, and every one proudly sporting records of distinction, will pass in review to the staccato beat of golf shots humming from one end of the course to the other.

The 72-hole battle, opening Thursday and continuing through Saturday, has been appropriately termed the blue ribbon classic of golf, because it is the only event in which the paid clan and the simon pures are permitted to get together and compete for the open title of America. It is a grueling struggle, always fraught with drama and thrills, a struggle that demands sheer courage, icy nerves, a smooth temperament, and, above all, a thorough knowledge of shotmaking.

Crack Field Entered.

The field this year shapes up as one of the strongest in history. The presence of every member of the Walker Cup team that so brutally assaulted the British last month at St. Andrew's, including the recently crowned British titleholder, Lawson Little, and the defending champion, Johnny Goodman, makes the tournament exceedingly interesting.

In fact, the open promises to develop into a battle between the professional aces and the highly successful amateurs, who number in their ranks besides the powerful Little and this "Good-man" from Nebraska, Max Marston, former amateur titleholder; Johnny Fischer, the lanky Cincinnati boy; Gus Moreland, the Texas sensation, and Jack Westland, the dangerous Chicagoan.

Goodman chipped and putted the big shots to death last summer at North Shore with an amazing scoring performance. His playing was most uncanny, and even though he slipped on the last nine, the steel-nerved Omaha boy had built himself such a fine lead after that record-smashing 66 of the second round that he managed to nose ahead by a one-stroke margin. For Ralph Guldahl, the big, 200-pounder now situated in Los Angeles, the finish was heartbreaking. He came to the seventy-second hole needing a four-foot putt to tie Goodman, but got the jitters and blew it.

Watch This Little Fellow.

Little will probably find himself more of a favorite than Goodman, on the strength of his record-smashing feats in the British championship. One of the longest drivers in the country, the 23-year-old Californian will find himself very much at home at Merion. He is not only long but straight with his woods. His approaching must have been near perfect at Prestwick, and his putting equally as perfect, judging by the fact that only once in 23 holes during his finals with Wallace was he over par.

But if you're looking for a red-hot favorite, Paul Runyan, the spectacular Westchester, N. Y., pro, is the laddie. Runyan ran away with honors in the golfing gold rush this past winter, smashing records here and there, and piling up a handsome sum of $3,000, the first $600 of which he won right down on the turf of our own Kenwood course.

Runyan Plays With Sarazen.

This steady-plodding little fellow doesn't hit such a powerful tee shot, but he can boom his seconds dead to the pin, and nail his putts when they're supposed to be nailed—for nowadays they're paying off on the putts. Runyan is paired with Gene Sarazen, former British and American open king, and it goes without saying that this twosome will captivate the attention of your golf-crazed spectators.

Sarazen, P. G. A. ruler, is ranked among the favorites, and a duplication of the sensational scoring he flashed at Fresh Meadows in the 1932 Open would make the cocky Italian a hard man to beat.

The old maestro, Walter Hagen, without a major victory to his credit since he won the 1931 Canadian now in his forty-first year, and Open, means business this year. In no way a Hagen trick, he showed up at Merion a week in advance of the opening day and is confident he will win back his open title. The Haig won his first in 1919 at Brae Burn.

Horton Smith, winner of Bobby Jones' Augusta invitation; Denny Shute, British open champion; Tommy Armour, the silver Scot, who took the American open in 1927; Bobby Cruickshank, Richmond, Va., pro, who lost in a stirring playoff to Bob Jones in 1923; MacDonald Smith, the Carnoustie Scot, who has won many important championships but never a major one; Wiffy Cox, of Brooklyn; Craig Wood, Deal, N. J., adonis, leading money winner of the 1933 season, Ed Dudley, of Philadelphia, and Leo Diegel, also of the Quaker City. Billy Burke, remembered for his stirring playoff for the 1931 title with George Von Elm, and Phil Perkins, the transplanted Britisher, who was low in the sectional tests—and there you have a picture of the various veterans who will be placed in the favored circle.

Merion brings back pleasant memories. It was in 1916 that Bob Jones made his debut in big-time competition there. Eight years later he won his first National amateur over the same course, and in 1930 he completed his golfing "grand slam."

Second in Row For Dor-A in Suburban

Three A. H. D. Hurlers Are Pounded; Hyattsville, Laurel Winners.

DOR-A nine, of Riverdale, yesterday rang up its second win in as many starts in the Maryland Suburban League when it pounded three Animal Husbandry Division hurlers for 20 hits for a total of 29 bases. Hyattsville beat Beltsville A. C., 15 to 2, and Laurel won over Berwyn in the other league games.

Joe Keegin, with four singles; Bob Haydon, with a homer and two one-basers; Bill Bryant, with a double and two singles; Buddy Nau, with a trio of singles, and Walter Burdick, with a homer, led the Dor-A onslaught.

Julius Nagy and Stump Talburtt divided the pitching for Dor-A and allowed the loser ten safeties. Oscar Basilliko, Bill Hoffman and Robey were on the mound for Animal Husbandry.

Laurel's First Victory.

Kelton Merson hurled Laurel to victory over the Berwyn nine. It was Laurel's first win in the loop and Berwyn's second straight setback.

Fred Haslup, catcher, and Diddie Reeley, third baseman, did most of the clouting for the winners, the former driving out a homer and the latter accounting for seven runs on his trio of safeties.

Irish Track Captain Given Kanaley Prize

South Bend, Ind., June 2 (AP).—Joseph A. Young, of Glen Ridge, N. J., captain of the 1934 Notre Dame track team, was awarded the Byron V. Kanaley prize of $200 at the ninetieth annual University of Notre Dame class day exercises today.

The prize goes to the senior monogram athlete, who has been judged most exemplary as a student and as a leader of men. Young will be graduated tomorrow.

Soldiers Home Wins.

The Soldiers Home nine hit hard and often to take a 12-to-4 decision from Fairfax Farms yesterday on the Harewood diamond. The Farm team was unable to solve the delivery of Knight, the Soldier pitcher, and never threatened. Reynolds completed the Vets' battery while Ray and Liet worked for the losers.

Score by innings:

Soldiers Home	500	240	010	—12
Fairfax Farms	000	000	310	— 4

Battalino Bout June 9.

Rio de Janeiro, June 2 (AP).—The postponed fight between Bat Battalino, former world featherweight champion, and Antonio Cerdan, was rescheduled today for June 9. The match was originally postponed owing to the Argentine's failure to arrive on time.

Wants Game Today.

Lanham A. C. baseball nine is seeking a game with an unlimited opponent for this afternoon on the Lanham diamond. Call Al Rector at Hyattsville 801-F-15.

Wheaton vs. Langdon.

Wheaton, A. C., which defeated the Emergency Relief nine yesterday in a 5-4 game, will face Langdon Mills in a double-header this afternoon. The first game is scheduled to start at 1:30 p. m.

Mitchell-McElvenny Meet Today for City Tennis Crown

Eliminate Latona, Markey, Respectively; Miss Tabler Upsets Mrs. Martinez to Enter Women's Finals; Plays Miss Miller for Title.

FINDING Anthony Latona the stiffest sort of competition, Dooly Mitchell yesterday was forced to bring his big guns into play to gain a 7—5, 3—6, 6—4 victory over his young opponent who fought back to the bitter end. By this win, Dooly moved into the final round of the City of Washington tennis championship. Ralph McElvenny scored a 3—6, 6—2, 6—1 decision over Bud Markey in the other semifinal match to move into the final round against Mitchell, the defending titleholder.

Clara Tabler registered an unexpected win over Ruth Martinez, No. 1 ranking local woman player, 0—6, 6—4, 6—3. Miss Tabler, who displayed remarkable comeback ability in pulling this match out of the fire, moved into the final of the women's singles and finds as her opponent Dorette Miller, who defeated Mary Ryan, 6—3, 6—2.

Latona's Forehand Weak.

It was Latona's forehand that let him down in the pinches and permitted Mitchell to score many points when he directed play at the side. The other departments of Tony's game were up to par and enabled him to give Dooly a real match.

Markey started out in great style, winning the first set, 6 to 3.

Beginning the next, however, McElvenny began to hit his stride and when Markey tired perceptibly Ralph took the next two sets.

In defeating Mrs. Martinez, Miss Tabler duplicated a win scored over her under similar circumstances in 1931, when she defeated her in the same round of this tournament.

Today's finals in men's singles find Mitchell opposing McElvenny, the man whom he met in the Wardman Park final last fall. On that occasion Dooly won out in four sets. Miss Tabler appears in the finals of the women's city championship singles for the first time since 1931, when she was vanquished by Mrs. Charles Stone.

Today's Schedule.

Men's final singles (3 p. m.)—Mitchell vs. McElvenny.

Women's final singles (2 p. m.)—Tabler vs. Miller.

Yesterday's Results.

Men's semifinal singles—Mitchell defeated Latona, 7—5, 3—6, 6—4; McElvenny defeated Markey, 3—6, 6—2, 6—1.

Women's semifinal singles—Miller defeated Ryan, 6—3, 6—2; Tabler defeated Martinez, 0—6, 6—4, 6—3.

Women's semifinal doubles—Bassett-Kayser defeated Turney-Johnson, 6—0, 2—6, 6—1.

Horse and Rider

By Marian May.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The row upon row of low, brown stables at Devon, gay with flags and pennants, last week housed nearly every existing type of horseflesh—from Shetlands the size of a large dog to Clydesdales weighing a ton apiece—and provided a veritable education in things equine.

Devon afforded the hunter or jumper-conscious person a chance to realize why fanciers of the driving horse get that way. Those who ride, if they watched closely, saw that those who drive do a great deal more than sit prim and straight in their swanky little runabouts while their ponies pull them round and round the ring. On the contrary, drivers literally have their hands full. While a rider can make use of his legs, weight and other aids in addition to his hands in controlling his mount, a driver must rely solely on his hands to keep his horse in a fast, high-action trot without breaking into a gallop.

Three Classes.

Harness horse competition at Devon was of three main classes—pony, heavy harness and fine harness—and all three must show infinitely more style than the conformation hunter that is so popular around Washington.

Eastertide, 12.1 hand high-stepping hackney pony that won the $1,000 harness pony stake for Cassils Farm this year at Devon, is a lively little brown mare that can not help attracting attention for the ambitious height to which she holds her fine head and docked tail and lifts her small legs as she trots in front of her shiny "bike." In conformation Eastertide is short-barreled, thick-chested, has a fine shoulder, and is smooth in contour and somewhat "streamlined" in appearance.

Ponies Favorites.

Although ponies are more popular as harness show animals than horses, there are classes for heavy harness or hackney horses which are about the size of an Irish hunter, with the same action and trim as the hackney ponies. The fine harness horses have long manes and tails and resemble five-gaited saddle horses—as, indeed, some of them are. Many know that Sweetheart on Parade, aged gray mare belonging to Mrs. William P. Roth, which appeared at Devon as a fine harness horse, was not long ago the most outstanding five-gaited mare in the country.

Billy Wales was the driver at Devon who had the biggest job of all. He maneuvered eight tons of horseflesh around the ring every afternoon, with the lead horses 50 feet away from him. The earth almost shook as he rumbled into the ring with Anheuser-Busch's famous eight-horse hitch of Clydesdales, the immense red and green wagon trailing with Wales seated high in the driver's seat, his hands so full of lines that he could barely get his fingers around them.

World Combed for Team.

It was not a simple job to collect these Clydesdales, Wales will tell you. The world was combed before the St. Louis brewing company could assemble this beautifully matched team of blazed-faced, white-stockinged bays, all weighing in the vicinity of 2,000 pounds apiece. The original home of the breed, Scotland, last September yielded Controller and Chancellor, weighing 1,950 and 1,975 pounds, respectively. Teddy and Brookdale, who weigh 2,000 pounds and 1,950 pounds, were picked up in Canada.

Not until you perch upon a camp stool in their stable quarters almost beneath their very hoofs, does the immense size of these Clydesdales really become apparent. The hoofs, to begin with, are almost a foot wide. The horses are so large that they can not turn around in their big box stalls without some difficulty. Their heads, which they are constantly hanging over the sides of the stalls in quest of sugar, are twice the length and breadth of that of a thoroughbred. When breakfast, lunch or suppertime arrives, they receive seven quarts of oats apiece.

But in spite of their formidable size, these animals are gentler and more affectionate than the light horses. Wales will also tell you that they are much easier to drive, being quieter and steadier than horses of other breeds—but that is pretty hard to believe after watching him being all but jerked off his perch in the red-and-green wagon by the pull of the eight lines which he must handle.

Western Golfers Win.

Western High School's golf team yesterday concluded its season with an 8-to-1 victory over Roosevelt at Rock Creek course. Billy Shea, of Western, defeated Capt. Andy Oliveri, 1 up.

Shea (Western) defeated Oliveri, 1 up; Boie (Western) defeated J. Brownell, 4 and 2; best ball won by Western, 3 and 2. B. Brownell (Roosevelt) defeated Higgins, 2 and 1; Pope (Western) defeated Morris, 7 and 5; best ball won by Western, 4 and 3. Roosevelt forfeited the remaining matches.

Szabor Takes Bride.

New York, June 2 (AP).—Sandor Szabo, known as the Adonis among wrestlers, was married to Lillian C. Kieffer by Bronx County Judge Lester Paterson today.

Jack Curley, wrestling promoter, was best man.

Marathon Star Enters Title Run Here

Komonen Hopes to Repeat 1933 Triumph; Faces Brilliant Field.

TWENTY-SIX miles of sun-baked, blistering highways will be the laboratory for an almost superhuman test of the slight, but sturdy frame of Dave Komonen, the greatest marathon runner on this side of the big pond today.

Komonen plans to run two full-distance marathons in eight days, and, of course, win both. His first start will be here Saturday in the Evening Star's National A. A. U. championship run from Mount Vernon to the Ellipse. The following week he'll run again in Canada—this time for a trip to London and a contest with Britain's champion.

The wiry modern Pheidippides ambled away from a large field last year to win the Star race literally by a couple of city blocks, and he is a top-heavy favorite to repeat his triumph Saturday. In his own mind he must win. The long trip from Sudbury, Ontario, a mere 300 miles beyond Toronto, must be crowned with a victory.

Earlier in the year Komonen won the Boston Patriot's Day trek in convincing style, leading a flashy field over the finish line by a comfortable margin. He counts on rolling up at least six triumphs this season, which would be something of an all-time record.

Next Saturday's race will be between the best men in the game and promises to be the outstanding marathon of recent times. The German-American A. C., of New York, is sending six runners, including the German champion, Paul De Bruyn, who also has won the Boston grind. Bill Steiner, Metropolitan champ, Russell Jekel and Mel Porter, who finished second in the race here last year, will be with the team.

From Beverly, Mass., comes word that the United Machinery A. A. will send eight-men including the Scotch title holder, Johnny Semple, who has won the New England crown two consecutive years.

Baltimore's veteran and popular legman, Billy Agee will head the Monumental City delegation that includes Clyde Martak, winner of the Star's first race in 1932, and Pat Dengis.

Washington will have the largest entry list it has ever had in the struggle. But runners are coming from all points of the compass, New England, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City and points east, west and south.

It's going to be a grand run.

Wise Bessa, Favorite, Winner at Latonia

Latonia, Ky., June 2 (AP).—Coming up strong in the final eighth, Wise Bessa, the favorite, today won the fifty-second running of the Clipsetta Stakes, $2,500 added, for 2-year-old fillies.

Lucy placed second and Iceberg third. They were coupled as the Mrs. R. J. Murphy entry. Lady Excellent, well to the fore, tired badly as they reached the final eighth and finished out of the money.

Women's Tennis League Led by Mount Pleasant

Only seven matches were played in the Women's Tennis League this past week, due partly to wet courts and partly to the participation of some of the league members in the City of Washington tournament and in the Sears Cup try-outs. The standing of the teams remains practically unchanged, with Mount Pleasant still far in the lead.

Standing of the Teams.

District Pros Favor Runyan in National Open; Barnett Likes Shute, and Sylvester Gene Sarazen; Beaver Dam Women to Hold Gala Field Day.

By Dave Herman.

WASHINGTON'S professionals, with the exception of a few, are picking Paul Runyan, the little dynamite from Westchester, N. Y., to win the National Open championship.

Fred McLeod, the Columbia pro, who won the open title back in 1908, figures Runyan will set the pace, with Horton Smith, as a safe second choice, and Billy Burke, third. Al Houghton, of Kenwood, picks Runyan, Craig Wood and Tommy Armour. Gene Larkin believes the Merion course is ideally laid out for "Little Poison," as Runyan is familiarly known. Dave Thompson, of Washington Golf and Country Club, and George Diffenbaugh, of Indian Spring, believe Runyan is the man who will crash through by Saturday evening.

Even Roland Mackenzie, is inclined to believe that Runyan is a good selection, but thinks that Ky Laffoon, the sensational Denver pro, is the lad who is liable to upset the bloomin' works.

Bob Barnett likes Denny Shute, British Open champion, claiming that Denny is just about right to take down the title. Al Tredor favors Ed Dudley, the long-driving Philadelphian, as his top choice, and Craig Wood as his second pick.

Tony Sylvester strings along with Gene Sarazen, declaring that he played with the P. G. A. champion last winter, and found him hitting his shots with the same skill he did in 1932 when he annexed the American and British Open crown.

Washington's two entries in the blue ribbon classic, Mackenzie and Mel Shorey, will leave tomorrow morning for the scene of the famous battle. Merion is no new place to the Congressional pro, for it was back in 1924 that he skyrocketed to fame by carrying George Von Elm to the thirty-seventh hole in the National Amateur. Roland has the honor of teeing off first with the host pro, George Sayers, at 8:30 and 11:40 on Thursday and Friday, respectively. Shorey goes off at 1 and 9:55 with Emil L. Loeffler, jr., of Oakmont.

Runyan, incidentally, is down in Richmond today giving an exhibition for sweet charity's sake. He is teaming with Billy Howell against Bob Cruickshank and Darrell Napier at the James River course of the Country Club of Virginia.

Mrs. N. J. Waldron, active women's chairman at Beaver Dam, has obtained permission of the District Women's Golf Association to hold an old-fashioned "field day" at the course Wednesday, June 27. Mrs. Waldron personally is seeing to it that all of the outstanding feminine players are entered, and already has received favorable response. Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Indian Spring, who holds the women's record at Beaver Dam with an 87, has consented to play, as have Mrs. Jack Scott, of Congressional, and Mrs. Don Scott, of Indian Spring.

Entries, Mrs. Waldron informs us, should be made through the chairman of each club. And this, also, applies to Beaver Dam members. There is no entrance fee, and women with handicaps up to 36 are invited. In addition to prizes in the customary 18-hole medal play with handicap, there will be the usual number of prizes for putting, least strokes on certain holes, &c.

Mention of Beaver Dam, reminds us that Mrs. Morris E. (Virginia) Irwin, popular member of the club, is trying mighty hard these days to lop a few shots off her 14 handicap. Mrs. Irwin, who did herself proud by going to the finals of the 1933 Washington Post match play with handicap tournament, has been playing her home course daily in the hope that she might do better than 94, which to date is her best for that long and rugged layout. That Mrs. Irwin knows how to play the 185-yard 17th is attested by the fact that in her last few rounds she has managed successfully to reach the carpet with her drive. Bill Kochenderfer, club manager, was an eye-witness to her mighty shot the other day. Her ball finished 15 feet from the cup, and she was down nicely for her 3. Bill strayed off line, but called the turn on his recovery, chipping dead for his half.

Mrs. Irwin, we would inform youse golfers, believes in comfort, and is struggling about the course in shorts these days. Her ammunition consists of men's irons and about the lightest women's woods on the market.

Hostile galleries making unnecessary noises and gestures at championship matches very often have a lot to do with unnerving a golfer.

When Al Houghton, of Kenwood, lost to Charlie Betschler, of Rodgers Forge, 1 up, in the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. finals at Hillendale, many claimed that the extreme hostility of some of the spectators was a contributing factor in Houghton's downfall after the Washington pro held a 3 up lead at one stage of the match.

The following letter was received by Houghton the other day from E. A. Seidle, president of the Hillendale Club:

"The inclosed clipping from today's issue of the Baltimore News attempts to portray even though in a minor degree the extraordinary conditions under which you labored in an attempt to win your match at Hillendale.

"The article does not sufficiently make clear the fact that the noise in the gallery that followed the match came from the admirers of your opponent, Mr. Betschler, who are members of his Rodgers Forge Golf Club. For their conduct we, of course, can make no apologies.

"The members of Hillendale wish to express their deep regret that the unfortunate incident which contributed to your loss of the coveted prize should have occurred on their golf course.

"With keen appreciation of the fine sportsmanship displayed by you under such trying circumstances, we

Carnera, Hard Worker, May Cut Loose Against Playboy Baer, Hurt by Illness

Italian Grant No Longer Awkward

Has Learned Trick of the Ring Trade and Never Forgets.

Will Have Advantage in Endurance; Doesn't Become Tired.

By Robert Edgren.

LESS than two weeks now, and we'll find out a lot of things about heavyweight fighting.

There are problems in the Carnera-Baer title fight that never have come up before. Is a natural fighter weighing a few pounds over 200 able to whip a hand-made mauler some 70 pounds heavier and very likely stronger in proportion to his weight? Max Baer is the natural fighter; Primo Carnera the artificial product.

Baer was a fighter from the first time he went into the ring, a green youngster picked up in an iron foundry, with nothing to attract attention except an extraordinary pair of shoulders, big feet and big hands, and a disposition as reckless as that of the famous Stanley Ketchel himself.

Carnera wasn't a natural fighter. They found him digging a ditch somewhere in France, and picked him up because of his tremendous and imposing bulk. He looked like a giant Jeffries, five inches taller than the champion of champions and built in the same massive proportions.

Primo Prefers Fighting.

But if his handlers made a fighter out of a good-natured ditch digger, nobody can claim that they did a poor job. They started him in European rings, where he scared most of his opponents into collapse, then brought him to America and eased him along with a lot of set-up bouts until he had learned something about the game.

They made him work. And fighting was so much easier than ditch digging that Carnera didn't have to be driven. His wise handlers had him taught point after point of the game—defense first, and then the use of a good long left jab. They made him run and dance and box until he could move with a speed surprising in such a huge elephant of a man. Awkwardness gradually departed. Long training loosened up his muscle-bound bulk. As he loosened up he hit harder. No reason why he shouldn't hit hard, with the tremendous weight of his big fists and forearms behind the punch.

Of course he's no snap-punching Fitzsimmons, but I rather think the only reason he hasn't shown more knockouts in recent fights is that he wasn't enthusiastic over socking little fellows like Paolino and Loughran. Jess Willard once said: "I wish there were more fighters of my own size; every time I hit a little fellow I feel like a big bully." Very likely the naturally good-natured Carnera has the same feeling. Against a dangerous puncher like Baer he may cut loose. He did cut loose against Sharkey. If he does, anything can happen.

Condition Means Everything.

One of Carnera's best points is that he works at his job. The wise lads behind him see to that. He doesn't fool around Hollywood and night clubs. He does plenty of work between fights—never lays off or grows soft so that he has to grind away for months to come back. Looking back over the champions anyone can see that the hard workers, who kept fit, were the real fighters.

John L. Sullivan was a terrific fighter in his youth, and a dissipated wreck when he lost the championship. Jim Corbett went in for the stage and an easy life after beating Sullivan, and was knocked out by Bob Fitzsimmons, a middleweight who scaled only 156 pounds, that fateful day at Carson.

Fitz was a model of hard work and clean living, and see the result. He won middleweight, heavyweight and light heavyweight championships, knocked out the hardest hitters among the big men of his time, all except Jeffries, and had his last ring battle at 52.

Jeffries trained hard and was invincible until he retired. Tommy Burns trained hard and lost finally only because he was too small for his competition. Johnson was a great fighter until fast living got him. Willard was great, but didn't keep fit after beating Johnson, stayed out too long, grew soft and was battered by Dempsey.

Dempsey trained hard, always kept fit, and lasted as long as any champion could be expected to. Tunney, most persistent and scientific trainer of them all, deliberately studied and worked for years to win the championship from Dempsey, and did it. Tunney was the last champion of real championship class, unless Carnera with his tremendous physical advantages and steady training proves his right to that title against Baer, or the slugging Baer wins in sensational style over the giant.

Primo Comes Up Mad.

Carnera's fighting points are his height, reach, bulk, a very good defense, a long last jab, a short right uppercut, plenty of endurance and plenty of courage. He has shown that last quality in several fights. A novice, he met the experienced knockout artist, Stribling, in London and in Paris. In those two fights Stribling floored Carnera three times. As Stribling described the fights to me at Cleveland three years ago, each time Carnera jumped up "roaring like a bull" and tried to chase Stribling out of the ring.

"Don't make any mistake about Carnera—he's no Christmas gift for anybody," Willie said. He probably knew.

Again Carnera showed courage when Sharkey floored him in their last fight. He took his count and came up dazed but fighting, and Sharkey couldn't put him down again. In the second fight Primo was outboxed for a time, but showed himself a far more dangerous hitter than Sharkey and won with a knock-out. In an early fight with Godfrey, when he knew hardly anything about boxing, he took a fierce mauling, had one eye closed tight, but walked in steadily, trying until stopped by the foul blow.

He Doesn't Forget.

Baer is going to have trouble with Carnera's long jab and trouble reaching the giant's chin. Tommy Loughran, a fast boxer, complained after Miami that he couldn't hit Carnera because Carnera kept stepping on his feet—the fact being that he couldn't hit Carnera. Primo had been coached to use a better jab than Loughran had, and to keep his right in blocking position all the time. His left shoulder is used to guard against right-hand punches—Fitzsimmons style. They taught him that, and there's one thing about the big fellow—he doesn't forget. Baer has a weird knack of landing rights, but he may not find Carnera an open target.

In a matter of endurance Carnera has an undoubted advantage if other things are equal. He doesn't get tired, which is just a matter of working hard and keeping in condition between fights, as well as of fighting often. He has done more fighting in the past three years than any other heavyweight. He wore out Paolino and Loughran and hardly drew a long breath. He may wear Baer out. Maxie had a marvelous natural reserve of strength and stamina, but a year of loafing and none too earnest application to training even after the Carnera match was made may count against him.

Simply Won't Work.

Last winter Jack Dempsey told me: "Baer won't work. He's having too good a time. He hasn't been in a gymnasium since he beat Schmeling." The idea of trifling like this with a chance to become champion horrified Dempsey, who was the hardest worker of all champions, always running and training to keep in shape between fights.

It may be noticed that while Carnera has developed a sound defense for head punches he seems little concerned about his body.

Is Mr. Baer Headed for a Fall? . . . By Robert Edgren

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

Things seems to be coming to a pretty pass between Mr. Billy McCarney, manager of Niftick Natie Brown, the leering menace of the heavyweight division, and Mr. Patsy Donovan Koontz, who pulls the strings on Rollicking Reds Barry, the Southeast slapper. You regular readers of this column both will recall that we last week printed and expounded upon a written wail from Mr. Patsy Donovan Koontz, who feels that his Rollicking Reds Barry and not Johnny Risko should be sharing the spotlight with Natie Brown at the Griffith Stadium tomorrow night.

In the interest of fair play, impartiality and filling up space, we print below a red-hot rebuttal from Mr. Billy McCarney:

Dear Bill:

Was quite surprised to read the letter you ran in The Post, Sunday issue, regarding the respective abilities of Natie Brown and Reds Barry. My surprise, principally, was to find a reason why you gave heed to a yelp from the Barry representative. It was questioning the intelligence of your readers. I will explain.

Two years ago when a heavyweight tournament was run in Portner's arena, Natie Brown came through a winner. Two of his victims were Reds Barry and Marty Gallagher. Just recently Brown won another tournament carrying with it the District championship. Gallagher beat Les Kennedy; Brown beat Gallagher; Bob Tow beat Reds Barry; Brown beat Tow in final. When and why did Brown decline a meeting with Barry, when Brown had signed to meet the winner of Tow vs. Barry bout? You and the local sport world knew this, so why give space to the yappings of a sorehead?

Only previous to Barry meeting Bob Tow, mouthy Mushky Jackson (nee Morris Ladisky), front man for the managerial forces for Barry, was asking, "Who's Natie Brown and why should Reds Barry fight him?" This was prior to Bob Tow smacking the tar out of Reds. The night of the Brown-Tow fight, B. B. Ladis (nee Ladisky), one of the gabby outfit who serve to make Reds Barry unpopular, voiced the statement that Reds was the only card in Washington and was going to fight exclusively for his outfit—the American Legion. The two Ladiskys answered the question of why Reds Barry is running a poor second among the heavyweights hereabouts.

Coming to Johnny Risko. Open your record book and take the Risko record from his beginning. His record is studded with defeats, still he stands out as the real destroyer of hopes among the heavyweights. He has yet to make a bad fight. He is always wanted back, once they have witnessed his do-or-die style in the ring. He has listed among his victims names that top the blue book of boxing. He murdered Galento, who knocked out Reds Barry with one punch. He defeated such stars of the ring as Sharkey, Tunney, Walker, Heeney, Paulino, Campolo, Godfrey, Loughran, Levinsky, in fact you could go down the line and find the name of every first-class heavyweight in his list of opponents or victims. You will not find the name of Reds Barry there. After June 4, Natie Brown will be among those who tossed and took leather from Johnny Risko, and I am hoping to see the name of Natie Brown among the few who have decisively defeated Risko. I am sorry Barry did not take the semifinal position on the card. It was a great chance for him to show his wares before the elite of the District. Maybe his last chance.

BILLY McCARNEY,
Manager of Natie Brown.

We had intended to expound upon this epistle, just as we did upon the written wail of Mr. Koontz, but after due deliberation it has just dawned upon us that perhaps we are being made the unwitting accomplice of a big league "smoke up" engineered by Mr. Billy McCarney and Mr. Patsy Donovan Koontz, working in cahoots. So, t'hell wid it.

Even at that, it might be kinda nice for all concerned if Mr. McCarney and Mr. Koontz did get worked up to the point of indulging in a bit of fisticuffing. A battle between them probably would be more thrilling than a waltz between their charges. And just think of all the fun Niftick Natie and Rollicking Reds could have seconding their managers and exhorting them to "Go out dere and kill 'em, keed—he can't hurt us."

Diversity of opinion regarding the fairness of the decision in the recent 15-round spearing contest in which Barney Ross nudged Jimmy McLarnin from under his welterweight crown served to crystallize an opinion that has been forming for some time in the mind (?) of this writer. It is now our firm belief that a boxing contest takes on an entirely different aspect about 15 rows from the ring than it has within pop-bottle tossing distance.

For the Ross-McLarnin bout, the writer was seated in the press box, just two rows away from the ring, in the midst of a nest of rabid pro-McLarnin enthusiasts. Long before the bout was over, practically everyone within questioning distance was agreed that Shamus was so far behind he could win only by planting his rock-abye right squarely on the button of the Joy of Jerusalem. When Joe Humphries announced the judges had failed to agree, a gasp of amazement went up from those close to the scene of battle.

Wins at Distance.

From those who viewed the proceedings at a distance, I learn that McLarnin was an easy winner and that he practically annihilated Ross in the final round, in which those close enough to see the shorter punches saw the ultimate winner play on the Harp with a two-fisted attack that left him hanging on and practically on the verge of a knock-out when the last bell brought welcome surcease. A friend of ours, who is a well-versed authority on this business of scoring fights, was relegated to a choice "ringside" seat in the 32d row. From there, he saw the Irisher win the battle easily. And he actually did see it that way from his pew in the hinterlands.

O'Connell Disagrees.

Our mutual friend and brother tourer of Harlem hot spots, Mr. Richard O'Connell, in his own inimitable manner, contrived to procure a seat between a $75,000-a-year syndicated columnist and a multimillionaire retired Beer Baron in the third row of the hard-working press. From his seat within the charmed circle, Mr. O'Connell distinctly saw Ross flit about the ring as elusively as the cherry in a Manhattan cocktail to win with all the ease of the Daring Young Man. And when Mr. O'Connell admits that Barnet Rasofsky kicked the pants off a broth of a lad loike Shamus McLarnin, you can be certain he actually saw it that way from his particular knothole.

Of course, Mr. Tammas O'Rourke, the judge who gave Ross only one round despite the fact that he was automatically awarded four on fouls, viewed the contest from a point farther away than the most distant "ringside" seat. He watched the fight from Ireland.

"Bloody Warfare Ahead" Warns Labor, While Violence Grips Nation

From the Atlantic to the Pacific last week National Guardsmen were called out in many of the large industrial centers to quell riots of the most serious nature. The air was thick with bricks and bayonets as labor threw down the gauntlet to the bosses. New strikes are impending in many areas.

The 40-year-old conflict of the labor unions with the capitalists of the Nation has suddenly been renewed with a fierceness and determination that bodes ill for the immediate future. Hundreds of thousands of workers, only recently provided with jobs, are furiously throwing them down again.

But why, asks the man in the street, do these troubles come at the present time?

Has not the NRA regulated industry, conciliated labor and capital?

Who are the guilty parties?

These are the urgent queries on everyone's tongue today. And still more urgent one looms! If these things be so, what is to become of our hope for prosperity?

Wagner Lays Blame At Industry's Door

Failure to Honor "Collective Bargaining" Clause of Recovery Act Has Plunged Nation Into Turmoil, He Charges.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Rioting workers marching in the streets, uttering threats against their employers and tossing bricks through windows. National Guardsmen with tear gas, bayonets and rifles beating back and killing overall-clad men in Toledo. Striking longshoremen paralyzing shipping on the Pacific Coast and defiant truckmen bringing commerce to a standstill in Minneapolis.

Brawny, plain-spoken men from the forges and Bessemer furnaces of Pittsburgh threatening the country and the Government with a "bloody" Nation-wide steel strike, terming a Presidential statement "a lot of bunk" and describing Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson as "a bag of wind."

Leaders of textile workers who stood ready to order 300,000 men and women to desert their looms until urgent action averted the walk-out by a temporary compromise. Rumblings of restlessness in the ranks of labor in basic industries everywhere and forewarnings of even wider disturbances.

Such has been the daily report served up to the average newspaper reader for the last two weeks. This average man and woman are puzzled and concerned. What is it all about? With prosperity returning, why do men leave jobs that others walking the streets would be glad to have? Has not the NRA raised wages, reduced working hours and guaranteed workers the right to organize unmolested for the purpose of selecting their own representatives for collective bargaining? Did not spokesmen for organized workers hail the recovery act as the Magna Carta of the rights of labor?

Were all these things illusions or has the NRA failed to fulfill all it promised? Or is it all a demonstration of the truth of what Calhoun almost a century age told the Senate when he said that "it is useless to disguise the fact there is and always has been in an advanced stage of wealth and civilization a conflict between capital and labor?"

Industrialists Given Blame by Wagner.

Perhaps the least partial, most judicious and objective man in the country at this moment familiar with all the facts regarding these labor eruptions is Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York—chairman of the National Labor Board, adviser to President Roosevelt on the labor sections of NRA codes and author both of the collective bargaining section of the Recovery Act and of a bill pending in Congress for the adjudication of labor disputes resulting from that act.

Senator Wagner is authority for the statement that failure of industrialists to accept and give full weight and effect to the famed section 7 (a) or collective bargaining provision of the Recovery Act is at the bottom of at least 75 per cent of the labor disputes in recent months.

If Senator Wagner's appraisal is correct, then the present labor agitation is but a continuation of the 70-year-old fight of American trade unionism for a place in the sun, for recognition and emancipation from the domination of employers—a fight started during the Civil War at the beginning of the industrial era by the ironmolder, W. H. Sylvis; carried on by the National Labor Union; the Noble Order of the Knights of Labor, and secret and terroristic Molly Maguires and, finally, by the American Federation of Labor.

There is nothing new about the issues in the conflict, and what is happening and being said now closely parallels events and declarations found in any history of the American labor movement, as will be subsequently seen. Looking back through that vista of years it becomes apparent that the American labor movement has made slow progress, chiefly because of the traditional viewpoint of industrialists that they shall be the masters of their households.

For 40 years and more labor has fought with fire and dynamite for a footing of equality with employers, has contended it wanted economic democracy, while the "bosses," even those with the most benevolent viewpoints, desired maintenance of the age-old relationship of master and servant—in effect an economic serfdom.

Until two years ago it was a matter of choice on the part of employers whether they would recognize labor organizations. Before that time they could require a pledge from anyone working for them not to join such an organization and the Federal courts of the land stood ready to see that such pledges were enforced.

"Yellow" Dog Contracts Curbed by Congress.

But in March, 1932, Congress determined to end what were commonly called "yellow dog" contracts and to curb the issuance of injunctions against groups of workers. In the Norris-LaGuardia Act Congress declared it to be "the public policy of the United States" that the worker should have "full freedom of association, self-organization and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor or their agents in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

This policy was declared as a guide to the Federal courts in dealing with requests for injunctions in labor disputes. While it was "public policy" it was binding only on the courts to prevent them from enforcing practices contrary to the declaration.

It was not until the National Industrial Recovery Act was passed by Congress a year ago that provision was made to bind industry to this policy. Section 7 (a) of that act reads as follows:

"Every code of fair competition, agreement and license approved, prescribed or issued under this title shall contain the following conditions: (1) That employes shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; (2) that no employe and no one seeking employment shall be required, as a condition of employment, to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and (3) that employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay and other conditions of employment approved or prescribed by the President."

This provision was justified on the ground that inasmuch as the NRA act suspended the antitrust laws and permitted industries to organize themselves and agree on measures for their mutual benefit, it was but justice to grant a similar right to labor.

But from the beginning this section became the most controversial in the law—so much so that even Administrator Johnson and later President Roosevelt refused to interpret it and inserted it textually into codes as speaking for itself. The result was that each industrialist interpreted it as he pleased.

Unions Wage Fiery Fight for 'Equality'

Issue That of Economic Serfdom or Democracy for the Working Classes, They Insist, as Rioting Is Widespread.

Many industrialists to whom the idea was abhorrent of dealing with what they regarded as "professional labor agitators" inspired the formation among their employes of company unions—organizations of employes in a single plant without affiliation with workers of other employers. In some cases the constitutions for such organizations were written by the management and handed to the workers, with the provision that they could change it only with consent of the management and that the representatives of the workers must be employes of the company.

Labor Leaders Start Organization Drives.

Awakened to their opportunity, the "professional labor leaders" immediately started drives to organize every industry in the country. They signed up many workers—in some cases making them exaggerated promises of what union membership would mean to them. But when the representatives of these "outside" unions attempted to approach the employers of their members they found many office doors closed to them.

The unions protested to the NRA. The employers replied they were complying with the law, that they had recognized already an organization of their employes and that the outside union was an interloper and intruder. A demand came then for plebiscites, conducted under impartial auspices, to determine what organization the workers wanted to represent them.

This brought into existence the National Labor Board, which, however, is without authority. In many cases the board has conducted such elections and in most cases the "outside" union has won. But in other instances the board has been thwarted in its desire to act as mediator—notably in the steel industry where the board last week sought an injunction to restrain the Weirton Steel Company from interfering in an election of employes to decide between a company union and the Amalgamated Association of Steel, Iron and Tin Workers, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

The injunction was refused on the ground that the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act, hailed by labor as legislation for its protection, prevented issuance of injunctions in labor disputes without a hearing. This hearing will be held, but it will take many weeks and in the meantime a strike of steel workers has been called for June 16.

Due to the impotence of the National Labor Board to handle the situation rapidly developing and now reaching a head Senator Wagner in March introduced a bill clarifying section 7 (a) of the NRA act and providing machinery for the determination of disputes over its terms. That bill in a revised form was favorably reported to the Senate a week ago and its passage has been requested by President Roosevelt.

The threatened steel strike and the reason for it are illustrative of the present labor situation in general. In order to get a perspective of the steel-labor situation, it is necessary to go back 42 years—to July 6, 1892, to be exact. The steel workers in Andrew Carnegie's mill at Homestead, Pa., became members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers and decided to strike to force the Carnegie Co. to recognize their union—the very reason for the threatened strike now.

Frick Refuses to Deal With Union.

The barons of the steel industry until that time—and since—successfully resisted all efforts to organize their workers into the regular unions. In the Homestead situation, Henry Clay Frick, in charge of the mill, refused to deal in any way with the Amalgamated Association.

As the strike was called, Frick brought to the mill an army of Pinkerton detectives and armed them to protect the property. On July 6, 1892, the steel workers clashed with the armed guards—rioting, hand-to-hand fighting, killings, capture of the mill by the workers and their final ejection by troops were the result.

Beaten back, the unionists were discredited in the public eye when Alexander Berkman, a young anarchist, caused a revulsion of popular feeling by attempting to assassinate Frick. In the public mind trade unionism and anarchy became synonymous terms.

The Homestead strike broke the back of the Amalgamated Association and Frick cabled Carnegie, who was vacationing in Europe, that "we have taught our employes a lesson they will never forget" and that he did not think "we will ever have any serious labor trouble again."

Except for a sporadic and ineffectual attempt to come back in 1919, the Amalgamated Association became a weak, impotent labor union, with a membership that by 1932 had dwindled to 5,000 in an industry which normally employed 500,000 men. Under the promise of the NRA act, however, the union in the last year has taken a new hold on life. It now claims 30,000 dues-paying members, with many thousand more holding initiation cards and reported ready to join any strike.

Representatives of this union have attempted to organize every steel mill in the country, battled,

District's Grand Old Lady Wins Struggle to End Squalor

Mrs. Archibald Hopkins Is Heroine of Victory Over City's Slums.

She Rejoices at News of Law to Eliminate Alley Shanties.

By Robert Cruise McManus.

Three-quarters of a century ago a little girl named Charlotte Wise peeked into the forbidden alley back of her father's house on H street and saw rats scurrying around.

That was her first glimpse of a Washington alley. She has seen many a one since, always with her mind colored by that childhood memory. In season and out, Charlotte Wise, who has been Mrs. Archibald Hopkins since before most Washingtonians were born, has fought for the alleys' obliteration.

At the end of her life, the fight is won. A bill to clean out these festering places of crime and disease is in the last stages before passage on Capitol Hill. The germ-breeding descendants of those great rodents little Charlotte saw 75 years ago are doomed.

There will be gardens some day where the alley dwellers hide now in Dickensian squalor.

Charlotte Wise Hopkins has been called "one of the most active, most constructive, most valuable citizens the District of Columbia ever had." She is the granddaughter of Edward Everett, Massachusetts statesman, president of Harvard and contemporary of Sumner and Charles Francis Adams. Her father, Henry A. Wise, was a Virginian, and a Naval officer.

Charlotte was born in Cambridge, Mass., in June, 1851, came to Washington the following September with her parents and has lived here ever since. In 1878 she married Col. Archibald Hopkins, of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, who was the second son of the famous Mark Hopkins, president of Williams College. In 1880 they bought the house on Dupont Circle, where she still lives. Col. Hopkins became chief clerk of the Court of Claims. His young wife enrolled as a volunteer worker for the Associated Charities.

There was more for charity workers to do in the alleys than in any other part of town. The White Plague fed there. Evictions for nonpayment of rent were common. The fight to wipe them out had already begun as Mrs. Hopkins went about, to see for herself the wretched, smothered lives of thousands.

One Alley Contains 70 Shanties.

They are little islands of humanity, huddled sometimes behind the walls of great office buildings, sometimes behind the homes of the wealthy. One alley has 70 shanties in it, so concealed that a man might daily pass them by in the street outside without ever learning of their existence. Others had their own neighborhood stores, so that dwellers need not go into the daylight from one day to the next.

Built in most cases by slaves, who fled the South during the Civil War, they remain rooted. The smallpox epidemic of 1871-72 raged through them. Criminals have always found them a welcome place of refuge. They are fertile breeding places for the dregs of the population, for receivers of stolen goods and keepers of disorderly houses. It was on the alley beats that policemen first began patrolling in pairs, for who could tell in the street outside when a lone officer was lying in the shadows, slugged?

No place for a lady, those alleys. But Mrs. Hopkins wasn't afraid.

In 1872, the year after it was created, the District Board of Health had begun the long struggle to exterminate alley houses, by condemning them as unfit for human habitation. For seven years it labored heroically to wipe out the germ-breeders, but in 1878 the board was abolished, the post of health officer was set up and the law permitting condemnation of houses for reasons of public health was rubbed off the books.

But the fight kept on, irregularly. In the early years of the century Charles F. Weller, general secretary of the Associated Charities, kept up a continuous agitation by means of pamphlets, photographs and personally conducted tours, on which Senators were sometimes wont to go along. Jacob Riis, settlement worker extraordinary, called the attention of his old friend, Theodore Roosevelt, to the problem, with some small results.

Efforts Shifted To Alley Houses.

When Mrs. Archibald Hopkins became president of the woman's welfare department of the National Civic Federation in 1912, however, the alleys were still there. Up to that time, the major part of her energies had been devoted to the Home for Incurables, of which she was president and which her uncle, Sidney Everett, had founded. But her knowledge of the alley situation filled her with the desire to stamp it out, through the National Civic Federation.

Indomitably, she has pounded away ever since. At the Monday Evening Club, at the D. A. R. convention, at any and every place she could get a hearing, Mrs. Hopkins has presented her challenging revelation of Washington's disgrace. Enlisting the aid of the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, she seemed to have won the victory in 1914, when Congress passed a law permitting condemnation of alley houses. The war postponed its effective date. In 1922, when it was finally put in motion, the courts upset its legality. Mrs. Hopkins was 71 in 1922, but she didn't stop fighting.

At her side in the conflict for almost 20 years has been John Ihlder, as consultant to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, secretary of the Washington Committee on Housing and publicist for the cause.

In March, 1932, Mrs. Hopkins played her last trump card. The new First Lady, active for a lifetime in welfare work, would surely be interested in the alleys. Mrs. Hopkins wrote to her, suggesting a tour of inspection. Mrs. Roosevelt agreed. The tour was made. In Mrs. Roosevelt's famous blue roadster, the two women went from block to block, with the granddaughter of Edward Everett and the wife of the President leaving the car to push past unkempt children and peer into row after row of hovels.

There had been an alley bill before Congress since 1930. The agitation for slum clearance, born of the depression and the public works program, was gaining ground. The President let it be known that he looked kindly on the ancient cause. Last winter The Washington Post published a series of articles by Felix Bruner on the subject, which rallied many new supporters.

She knows now that the victory is won, and that the Capper-Norton bill will soon be headed for the President's desk. It sets up a District housing authority, to be appointed by the President, which will have $500,000 to buy alley houses immediately, and may borrow $500,000 more for the same purpose.

As she leaves the field at last, this authority and its potential membership are Mrs Hopkins' main concern. Advised by her doctor to be less active in the future, she will, nevertheless, be apprised of what is going on as the campaign progresses.

Mrs. Charlotte Wise Hopkins, now a lady of 75, has spent the better part of her life waging a relentless war against the slums of the Nation's Capital. Last week she had the joy of seeing the victory won, with the passage of a bill, the effect of which will be to eradicate the miserable alley dwellings that were a blot upon the District of Columbia.

Capital Ogpu Keeps Sharp Eye on Public Servants' Private Lives

Vast Secret Force Trails Job Holders

Prominent Citizens Often Investigated by Sleuths.

Many Inquiries Ordered by Cabinet Concerning Appointees.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Blase Washington is growing uneasy.

There is a reason for this strange state of affairs. Word has been bruited around that Uncle Sam, tired of his time-honored role as an indulgent uncle, has hired a bodyguard, of all things.

The once gay old boy has turned cautious. No longer will he be the docile prey of beady-eyed gangsters, kidnapers, smugglers, counterfeiters, tax dodgers, grafters or international spys.

In the language of the law violators themselves, Uncle Sam has "turned on the heat."

He has enlarged his law enforcement and investigating agencies to the point that, taken as a whole, they seriously rival the dreaded OGPU or "Gaypayoo" of Soviet Russia.

This bold move toward protection of the National pocketbook has become so pronounced that one official candidly observed:

"The OGPU is a Y. M. C. A. compared to our secret police system."

Crooks and Shysters Terror-Stricken.

Be that as it may, the minions of the law have struck terror in the hearts of many nimble-witted crooks and shysters drawn to the Capital by the lure of easy money. Not a few have returned to the hinterlands unscathed. Others have wound up in durance vile. Still others, and they are in the majority, have begun to watch their P's and Q's.

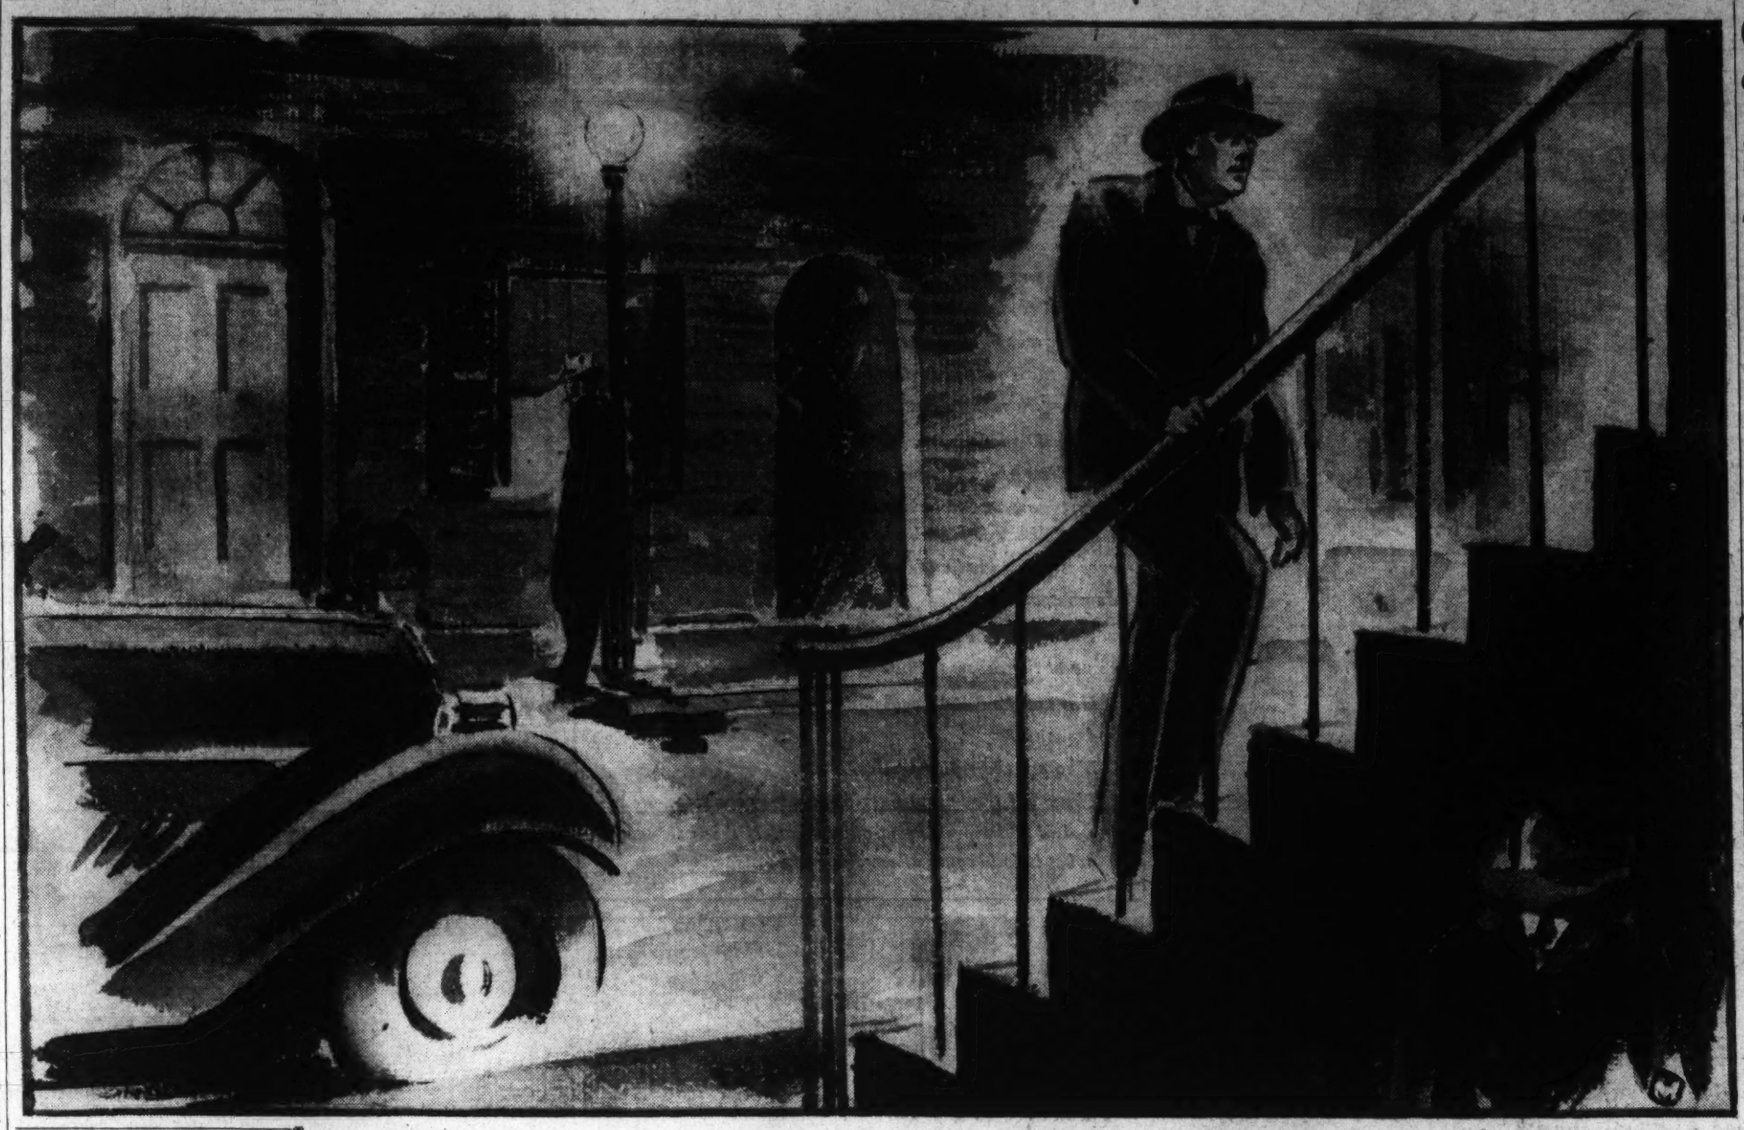
Make no mistake about it, Uncle Sam now has a mailed fist and he isn't pulling his punches. The offensive probably will spread to an even wider front when Congress gets around to doling out more largesse.

A curious reporter set out the other day to learn how many Federal units figure in the American OGPU. His list of investigative organizations soon assumed mansized proportions. Here's a bird's-eye view of the outstanding units:

Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice; Division of Investigation, Interior Department; Secret Service, Army, Navy and Marine Corps Intelligence Services; Labor Department Immigration Service; Post Office Department (inspectors); Treasury Department Prohibition Service; Agricultural Adjustment Administration (crop reduction investigators); Internal Revenue Bureau (income tax agents); Customs Service; Federal Emergency Relief Administration (relief investigators), and Commerce Department (aviation inspectors).

Congressional committees, of course, have ace sleuths on their pay rolls.

If you have a neighbor who takes his livelihood where he finds it it won't be amiss to warn him to keep a weather eye peeled for the fashionably gowned young woman he probably will find seated across the aisle from him the next time he gives Washington's swankiest night club the once-over. She may be a Federal detective.



Men in the Nation's public life today are not without their shadows—even when the sun is down. For Uncle Sam's sleuths are watching their every move, seeking to detect any wavering from the straight and narrow path of civic honesty. The United States Secret Service staff puts the Russian OGPU to scorn. Many is the grafter who has discovered to his discomfiture that the shadow of Sherlock Holmes himself hovers vigilantly over the Capital.

These agents, too, are a far cry from the prohibition officers who gave pre-repeal drinking its zest. They hunt for bigger game. Every resource of a mightly government is at their command. A glimpse at their expense accounts—if possible—unquestionably would show they are anything but pikers.

It is not alone the out-and-out crook who draws the attention of these plain-clothes investigators. Indeed, more often it is a man in public life, a lobbyist for some favor-seeking corporation or a formidable candidate in a race for a diplomatic appointment.

It is not unusual for a Cabinet officer to pass along the word that he wants Mr. Z "tailed" until further notice. Just to be sure that Mr. Z's movements are accurately determined two or three agents, trained in the art of shadowing, may be assigned to the case. One of the operatives probably will precede the victim on his daily rounds while another dogs his footsteps from behind.

When the Cabinet officer reaches his suite each morning he will find a neatly typewritten report telling how many blondes Mr. Z winked at the day before and the number of olives he had for breakfast. The report might even include a stenographic transcript of some dark plot in which Mr. Z figured, obtained through the use of a dictaphone or by adroit eavesdropping.

It is an open secret around town that investigators almost invariably pry into the personal affairs and background of aspirants for posts of public trust. One recent occupant of the White House used to pigeonhole automatically all applications of persons found to be disciples of John Barleycorn.

Lobbyists have been high on the list of those followed hither and yon by Federal men since President Roosevelt made known he would not countenance the sale of "legal services" by men whose chief stock in trade is supposed back-door influence at the White House.

Everything under the sun is investigated at one time or another by the more than 2,000 Federal detectives operating from Washington headquarters. Unusual emphasis has been laid on detection of graft since Mr. Roosevelt took office.

Secretary Ickes, who frankly admits he is "naturally suspicious," has perfected a highly competent gumshoe squad of some 400 men at the Interior Department. Perhaps that is one of the reasons he has become known among correspondents as the strong man of the Cabinet.

Louis R. Glavis—he of the soft voice and bland manner—was chosen by Ickes to look into every questionable proposal brought to light in the expenditure of countless millions on public works. His staff has delved into shady manipulations from Maine to Texas. Thousands of cases have been scrutinized. Eighty-odd were turned over to United States attorneys for prosecution.

The magnitude of Glavis' job calls for a budget of $300,000 a year. It has been termed a worthwhile investment by Ickes.

Few New Dealers have a reputation comparable to that of Glavis. He was restored to Civil Service by Those Who Pocket Civic Funds Are Silently Ferreted Out.

Undercover Work Now Embraces Whole Country.

President Roosevelt last August. The President commented he was acting to "right an injustice allowed to stand for nearly a quarter of a century."

Glavis was dismissed from the Federal service in 1908 after he uncovered irregularities in the Alaskan coal lands. He was one of the principals in the celebrated Ballinger-Pinchot controversy which culminated in the withdrawal from public life of Secretary of the Interior Ballinger.

The dean of the American OGPU is Chief William H. Moran, of the Secret Service. Now a white-haired veteran of 70 and a veritable encyclopedia of criminology, he joined a tiny band of Federal agents 52 years ago.

Retiring and deliberate in manner, Moran is a Presbyterian deacon and a bass choir singer. He has been the arch-foe of counterfeiters and other lawbreakers since the year 1.

Enters Executive Mansion at Will.

Upon his shoulders has rested the responsibility of protecting the lives of Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover and Roosevelt. He has exchanged confidences with many Presidents. He is one of the few persons who can enter the White House at will.

Such unscrupulous characters as "Jim the Penman," creator of spurious $100 bills, hold no terror for Moran. He solved another notable case at the turn of the century. There was a leak from the locked rooms of the Agriculture Department crop-reporting board. Someone was supplying speculators with advance information on the board's cotton crop estimates. Moran discovered the news was signaled by raising and lowering a window shade. He has been a famous ever since.

The renown of the Bureau of Investigation at the Department of Justice, headed by able J. Edgar Hoover, has extended to the four corners of the earth. The bureau's inquiries range from espionage to peonage.

Only recently Prof. Raymond Moley, sometime No. 1 Brain Truster, urged President Roosevelt to increase Hoover's staff from 400 to

Sze Calls Japan Aggressor of China And the Cause of Suffering in Asia

Communism is no real danger in China. But Japan is the instigator of an undeclared war in China that has cost the lives of thousands of men, women and children.

So declared Dr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, in an exclusive interview for The Post.

Dr. Sze explained that during recent weeks he had not given any other interviews upon the recent developments in the Far East because he had found there was no necessity to do so. He was glad to note that the newspapers of America are so fair and impartial that they open their columns freely and generously to both Chinese and Japanese to present their views.

Refuting Statements of Japanese Ambassador, He Points to the Vast Toll of Suffering That Has Resulted From Warlike Acts.

He noted that Mr. Matsuoka had published a long signed article and that the Japanese Ambassador in Washington had given an interview to The Washington Post on Sunday, May 13. In both cases he found no editorial indorsements, while on the other hand, after the statement of the Japanese spokesman of April 17, the editorial comments of American papers were prompt and unanimous in their condemnation of it.

Dr. Sze said he believed "this shows that the leaders of public opinion in this country know the situation of the Far East so well that they need no further illumination from me or anyone else."

The Minister was asked his opinion about communism in China. Dr. Sze answered "the so-called communism in China is really the result of the economic conditions. There is no danger that China will adopt Communism of the Russian type. Following the overthrow of the Kerensky's government a large number of Russians had to come to China for refuge. At one time the number was very large and a good portion of these were obliged to live on charity. It was for some time quite a problem for China to take care of such a sudden and large influx of foreigners.

Drop in Ruble's Value Causes Suffering.

Then, again, a large number of Chinese who used to trade and work in Siberia suffered immensely through the change of regime and through the fall in the value of the ruble. So with what they have seen with their own eyes or themselves experienced the Chinese people were not tempted to follow the example set to them by their great neighbor. Thus, though there are some in China who call themselves Communists, they are far from being of the Russian type.

"There is a certain amount of unrest at this time; but there is nothing unusual in this. We know there is unrest in every country of the world now.

"In one sense Japan may perhaps have done a service to China, if I may put it that way, in making the savage attacks she has made upon her with her army and navy. I mean by this that these attacks have had the effect of cementing and consolidating all the factions of China into a single mass of sentiment in opposition to Japan and all her works.

"Japan has been declared by the entire world responsible for the undeclared war against China which has now lasted for more than two and a half years, and which has cost the lives of thousands of our men, women and children. At Shanghai without a shadow of reason or right Japan attacked a defenseless city and slaughtered many Chinese, including women and children. China has never disturbed the international peace of the Far East.

"During the first half of the nineteenth century she was a victim of wars against herself waged by Western powers, and, in 1894-95, was forced into a war with Japan. That was a war which Japan desired, and which China did not wish, but could not escape from. Japan fought the Sino-Japanese war of 1894-95 and the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-5. Japan fought in the World War—seizing and retaining Shantung, the territory of her ally in the World War. In the light of the above it requires a high degree of audacity for Japan to assert that to her belongs the mission of maintaining peace in the Far East.

"The truth, of course, is that the Japanese claim is, in reality, a threat not only to China but to all the powers with interests in the Far East—a threat that, unless she is permitted to do whatever her imperialistic policies dictate, she will use force and thus herself break the peace.

"In other words, Japan is willing to maintain the peace in the Far East, but only on condition that her actions shall not be opposed by others. Any resistance to her will, even by the victims of her aggressions, she attempts to stigmatize as a threat to that peace which she declares herself determined to maintain.

"I have spoken of the audacity of a country setting herself up as the guardian of a peace which, more than any other country, it has broken in the past, and, at the present time, is most seriously threatening. A greater audacity, if that be possible, is that the representative of Japan should refer to the sanctity of treaties, for the fact is that Japan herself represents the supreme example of a country that has had no regard for international engagements—not even for those freely and voluntarily entered into by herself and of the most solemn and important character.

"Continues to Pursue Her Illegal Action."

"I refer, of course, to the Covenant of the League of Nations, the Kellogg Peace Pact and the Washington Nine Power Treaty. As for her violations of assurances given to the Council of the League of Nations and to individual powers, they are almost without number. In this connection let this fact be noted, that Japan is the only country in history which has been unanimously and formally found guilty as the violater of treaties by all the other countries of the world, and, at the present time, in spite of this universal condemnation, is continuing to pursue her illegal and immoral lines of action.

"Japan claims that she is a misunderstood country. It is, indeed, difficult to understand how a people that claims to be at all civilized can be so utterly disregardful of the "Japan Brought Destruction!"

Dr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, Chinese Minister to the U. S. A., does not think that his country stands in need of the help of Japan to straighten out its internal affairs. On the contrary, he accuses the Japanese of being the trouble-makers in the Far East.

Cuba's Joy Over Freedom Mingles With Fear at Grave Perils That Lie Ahead

By Kendall Foss.

Loud huzzahs, some vigorous flag-waving, and a judicious admixture of smiling acknowledgment from the balcony tended to obscure a little last week the underlying issues latent in Cuba's new status as a truly free and independent nation for the first time in the island's history.

Beneath the cheering one or two faintly discordant notes were audible. But they didn't really mar the rejoicing. They only served to remind detached observers that the last has not been heard about Cuba by any means.

These notes included dismal predictions from Havana's American community, intent upon guessing the future of this country's $1,200,000,000 investment in the Pearl of the Antilles. There were also a couple of ominous remarks uttered on Capitol Hill. Senator Pittman, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said:

"For the benefit of those who do not know it, nonintervention doesn't mean you won't go ashore to protect your own nationals." The remark was prompted by the fact the new treaty abandons a 31-year-old right to intervene in Cuba whenever life, property, and stable government appear in danger.

Platt Amendment A Paradox for Years.

Senator Vandenberg put his finger on another more or less ignored phase of the treaty situation when he suggested:

"The Platt amendment has been a paradox for years. We can not escape economic responsibility so long as the amendment remains part of the Cuban constitution. And we've got all the economic responsibility we can handle right here at home."

Time was when this country seemed pleased with the growth of its influence beyond its shores. It was delighted to draw outlying areas into its political and commercial orbit. The bigger the better.

Lately, however, the trend has been reversed. Recently the Philippines were rather hurriedly given their delayed independence. Now Cuba is either freed from the burden of American supervision or cast briskly adrift. It depends on the point of view.

Two things support the latter view: The manifold protestations of domestic sugar producers against plans to help Cuba by admitting more of the snowy white product and the evident fact that Cuban leaders were far from impatient at the delay in removing treaty restrictions.

Back in November, President Roosevelt in a statement issued at Warm Springs, Ga., declared his intention to abolish the Platt amendment as soon as possible. Negotiations to this end probably got under way shortly after Carlos Mendieta took over the presidency of Cuba in January and at once was blessed with American recognition.

America's Billion-Dollar Business Interests in the Island Are Regarded as a Danger; So Also Is Mixture of Many Races.

They were not concluded and made public until after rumors of a widespread anti-American plot in Havana were given substance by reports of a series of attempts at violence against Ambassador Caffery and his staff. There was, too, a suggestion of haste about the business of signing and ratifying the new treaty which lent credence to the belief this country was far more anxious to be relieved of Cuban responsibilities than was Cuba to be relieved of American supervision.

The treaty was signed shortly before 4 o'clock last Tuesday afternoon. Before the ink was dry and the wax of the seals had fully cooled the treaty was on its way to the Senate for ratification. A scant 48 hours later the Senate had accepted the treaty without a record vote and without a single dissent and sent the document back to the White House. Officers of the Senate do not recall an instance in ratification history to equal this one for dispatch.

Whatever office-holding Cubans may think of the advantage of complete independence, Latin America at large can be counted upon to admire the step. For the dropping of the Platt amendment backs up many high-sounding words about the "good neighbor" policy with a tangible deed. It is to be followed in the not too distant future by a new commercial treaty with Cuba out of which both countries are expected to profit considerably.

Latins May Change Idea of "Colossus."

Perhaps the most substantial benefit the United States will acquire out of its Cuban policy is a warming up in the attitude of other Latin-American countries toward the dreaded Colossus of the North. If this transpires, it will be a very substantial gain.

For Cuba, however, the advantages of complete independence are not so manifest. Geography has condemned the island to eternal dependence upon American markets and history and ethnology have sentenced her to a long and uncertain apprenticeship before true stability can be realized.

Since Cuba first became an entity in the form of a Spanish colony, a thin white crust has ruled an incoherent and largely inert population of mixed bloods. This was as true after the War of Liberation in 1898 as it had been before. The personnel changed, but not the proportions.

White Cubans have a haunting fear this may not always be so. Contemplation of the primitiveness of many of the African strains which thrive and multiply in Cuba disquiets. It also tends to minimize faith in democratic experiments in government.

Few spots on the earth's surface display quite the mixture of bloods Cuba has to offer. West Indian Negroes, originally from the most primitive sections of Africa, abound. So do Chinese, and Indians from Central America, and Hawaiians. Japan is not unrepresented. Nor is Portugal and Italy and Greece and, of course, Spain. With the exception of the more prosperous members of the white races, intermingling has been common. The result is a cauldron of all shades and strains, but a cauldron where the primitive and the savage elements of the African inheritance have a tendency to perpetuate themselves most strongly.

Knowing what happened in Haiti, Cubans watch the virility of the African strain closely. But the Secretary Hull (seated) and Manuel Marquez Sterling, the Cuban Ambassador, sign the new commercial treaty which deprives the U. S. A. of the right to intervene in Cuba to protect American interests there. It makes Cubans masters of their own land.

Quintuplets Are Five-Pointed Star for Wise Men of Science

Rare Case Is Opportunity For Research

Psychologists Anxious to Observe Whether All Act Alike.

Interest Is Centered on the Development of Their Minds.

By Robert F. Whitney

If a psychologist gets hold of Cecile, Yvonne, Marie, Emily and Anne, a great bone of contention may be settled.

It is an important question, too, whether environment or heredity is the important factor in the molding of the individual.

The ladies mentioned are the Dionne quintuplets, the five tiny girls who were brought into the world by Mrs. Olivia Dionne on a small farm in northern Ontario.

For the past 50 years men of science have been warring over the question as to whether the conditions in which we live or our heredity is the most important factor in making us what we are.

The five tots, who all together at birth only weighed a little over 13 pounds, offer the best way of testing these theories that has ever happened.

These youngsters, who are defying all medical precedent in surviving and gaining strength, are the answer to the psychologist's prayer for subjects for a serious study of the heredity theory.

Or such was the statement made yesterday to The Post by a well-known physician, who asked that he not be quoted in the matter.

May Help Prove or Refute German Ideas.

The Dionne quintuplets may help prove or quash the German ideas on the breeding of a superior race and do the same for similar eugenic theories, simply because all five of them have exactly the same heredity.

The medical verdict is absolutely unanimous in asserting opinion that all five of the baby girls had their origin in a single fertilized egg cell.

This cell evidently divided to make five cells, each of which developed into a human infant. Science already knows that such a division results in each child having identical chromosomes, the cell structures which determine characteristics of the individual.

The assumption that the children are absolutely identical is based upon their sex. Because all are girls, scientists believe that each came from a single fertilized parent cell. If the five infants were both boys and girls, it would have meant that they had developed from more than one fertilized egg.

So, evidently, the world has five individuals, who, if they win their fight for life, will each be a living experiment to enlighten the indefinite road of eugenics, to tell whether children who have precisely the same hereditary characteristics inevitably develop along precisely the same lines, physically, mentally and morally. If Cecile is a brilliant thinker, can Yvonne be a backward girl? If Emily should be a mischievous person, would it be possible for Anne to be a prime, prudish little girl?

Should Have Same Color Hair and Eyes.

According to what is believed as true at present, with allowance made for their different sizes at birth, Cecile, Yvonne, Marie, Emily and Anne should at least be identical physically.

This idea is practically accepted by every leading scientist. The five should grow up to have the same color hair and eyes, they should be almost identical in size.

Already the world has had such examples in so-called "identical twins"—twin children who had the same heredity due to a splitting of a single fertilized egg and their subsequent development into two individuals.

But twins have not furnished the conclusive evidence which they might have. There have been slight differences in their development which have been taken by both the heredity and the environment schools of thought as proof of their contention.

With given identical infants to study, the chances of an error in the conclusions are greatly reduced.

Scientific interest will center, not in the physical likenesses and possible dissimularities the babies may display, but in the mental elements, the make-up and development of their minds.

Scientists are agreed that superior individuals from a standpoint of pure physical strength can be developed by mating individuals superior in this respect. This has been demonstrated a thousand times with race horses and domestic and farm animals.

The same would be true no doubt with humans. Hitler with his desire for mating tall blonds could no doubt produce a superior race of soldiers, of tall, strong men. But would there result many mental giants?

Whether mental qualities are inherited, whether insanity, feeblemindedness, and their counterpart, genius and talent are carried by the chromosomes—this is a problem for which as yet science itself has no satisfactory answer.

So if the five tots break all existing records and all grow to womanhood, they will constitute a living experiment in heredity.

If all live together on the northern Canadian farm, if all are taught by the same teachers, and their mental development differs, a strong point will be raised against those who believe that heredity alone determines mental faculties of the individuals.

If this is so science will have to go searching for a new theory, some third cause which determines what the individual mind shall be like.

However, if the five should by chance be separated and are subject to radically differing environments, and if each develop, on a broad scale, a similar mental pattern, exponents of the belief that heredity is the governing factor will have very conclusive evidence.

Defeating Death Is Present Problem.

Up in Ontario at present the problem is a more immediate one. It is that of defeating death, death which has ended the brief lives of every set of five children born in the last 500 years, during which medical records have been kept.

So the quintet of humanity, the smallest of whom weighed 2 pounds 4 ounces and the largest, 3 pounds 4 ounces, has been placed in an incubator, operated by hot water, because the Dionne homestead has no electricity, to help survival.

Although the incubator is a fairly new invention for bringing up tiny babies which have been born prematurely, it is really a simple thing, meant to conquer the two most deadly enemies of infants, drafts and infection.

An incubator is just an enclosure

Quintuplets are the rarest thing under the sun, and still more rare it is for them to survive. If the five Dionne babies born last week all live they will furnish unparallelled material for scientific study of heredity. The lower photograph shows Papa Oliva Dionne with his newest five children at their home in Callender, Canada.

Land Areas Gradually Move West

Evidence to Support Continental Drift Theory Found.

San Diego, Calif., Shifts 40 Feet in the Last Seven Years.

The continents are great ships floating westward on an uncharted sea which is the surface of the world.

This theory which offers the most satisfactory explanation for the dynamic geologic forces seems practically proved.

Last week the Naval Observatory announced that preliminary calculations indicated that San Diego, Calif., was 40 feet farther west than it was seven years ago.

Scientific workers there will not say definitely that their figures can be taken as positive—there may be errors or factors which they have not considered, they say—but the evidence seems convincing to others.

The facts are these: Seven years ago longitude determinations were made at several stations and at many places on the earth's surface. These determinations were made with utmost effort at accuracy.

Calculations Will Be Correlated at Paris.

Last fall similar astronomical observations were made and the results calculated. Naval Observatory astronomers made determinations at San Diego and at Washington.

Calculations for Washington have not yet reached the result stage. When all determinations at all stations are completed, they will be sent to Paris, where an international organization will correlate them and compare each station with its former longitude.

The determinations were started seven years ago to try to check the increasing popular theory that the land areas were moving in a direction opposite to the direction of rotation of the earth. This is caused, according to the theory, by the rotation in combination with tidal effects of the larger planets, the sun and perhaps the stars.

This westward movement, geologists who sponsor the theory contend, is responsible for the physical appearance of the earth's surface and is the cause of the great crystal movements which result in the strata being folded into high mountains.

The geologists even say that on the westward side of the continents most folding of rocks into mountains occurs because there the floating land area piles up as it pushes against the tremendous mass and weight of the sea.

Toll From Bad Eyes Exceeds U. S. World War Casualties

By Raymond A. Bruner.

A magician walks down into the audience. A butterfly net is in his hand. He swings the net through the air, and presto! a pigeon, out of nowhere, is caught in it.

You have looked sharply at every movement of the magician. But you did not look sharply enough to observe a man in a seat on the aisle drop the pigeon in the net as it swung around.

Your eyes were not quick enough. They might have moved with every one of the magician's motions, but while your eyes are in motion you are blind.

In order to pick up an image you must stop that motion for the briefest intervals—sometimes as brief as seven one-hundredths of a second. That is what your eyes do when you read across the line of a printed page.

In good light they may stop during an interval that short, when all details stand out sharply in contrast.

But suppose the light is dim. The interval at which the eyes must stop to pick up an image is considerably lengthened—to as much as four-tenths or nearly one-half a second. A lot can happen during that time. That is one reason why we do not see everything a magician does. That is one reason why dim light helps him.

This has an important bearing upon our every-day seeing—and demonstrates how necessary good light and sharp contrast are.

These facts are part of the findings at the lighting research laboratory of the General Electric Co., at Nela Park in Cleveland. In that laboratory thousands of tests have been made under the direction of Dr. Matthew Luckiesh during the last 24 years. As a result of this work has come the new science of seeing, a new science which approaches vision in a new way, not only from the physiological standpoint, but from the standpoint of lighting and the practical application of the eyes.

Not only has he directed thousands of experiments but has constructed some ingenious devices to show the effects of modern civilization upon our eyes and to show how improper lighting, for instance, impairs the functioning not only of our eyes but of our whole mind and body as well.

"In normal times the annual casualties due to poor seeing in everyday peaceful activities in this country exceed the total number of casualties in the American Army during its entire participation in the World War," Dr. Luckiesh declares in justification of his work. This statement he makes in his book "Seeing and Human Welfare," which is just off the press.

"Spoilage of products of our industries and property damage on our streets due to poor seeing amount to many millions annually.

"Every few minutes a person is accidentally killed in this country. How many of these deaths are due to poor seeing?

Half of U. S. Adults Have Bad Eyes.

"Studies indicate at least one-fifth of them are. And a more critical analysis from the newly extended viewpoint of seeing shows this estimate to be conservative. Nearly one-half of the total number of adults in this country have defective eyes.

"Suppose crippled eyes could be transformed into crippled legs. What a heartrendering parade we would witness on a busy street."

How frequently do these eye cripples occur among persons of various occupations? Dr. Luckiesh says that among hunters, sailors, soldiers, policemen, farmers and laborers, fewer than 20 per cent have defective vision; carpenters, servants, painters, butchers, engineers, 20 to 40 per cent; masons, printers, machinists, foundrymen and blacksmiths, 40 to 60; housewives, textile workers, musicians, telegraph operators and miners, 60 to 80, and clergymen, teachers, draftsmen, watchmakers, bookkeepers, tailors and proofreaders, 80 to 100 per cent.

People in the occupations that have been largely created by our present-day civilization have the most defective vision.

It is variously estimated that homo sapiens has been in existence 40,000 to 100,000 years. For millions of years his eyes were evolving. For those millions of years his man and animal ancestors had accustomed their eyes to sunlight 1,000 times brighter than some of the better lighting in the home of today, Dr. Luckiesh declares. Even under the shade of a tree where the stone age man leisurely carved out the head of an ax, the lighting is 100 times as great.

Furthermore, during most of man's existence he used his eyes to look at things far away. The pupils of his eyes, most of the time were kept parallel. Only occasionally did men converge them to look at things close at hand.

Today, Dr. Luckiesh points out, matters are reversed. In many occupations the eyes are kept converged much of the time under lighting poorer than the better artificial illumination.

"Most persons, ordinarily indifferent to seeing, would shudder at the thought of reading or performing other visual tasks one foot from an ordinary candle," declares the lighting research director. "However, most persons do this daily, even under modern efficient and convenient electric light.

Intricate and Ingenious Apparatus Evolved.

"Everywhere throughout the indoor world by day and night millions of persons read and work under intensities of illumination less than one foot-candle. Erroneously 10 foot-candles are thought to be good—but outdoors the sun at midday is as intense as 10,000 foot-candles and even in the shade of a tree the intensity is 1,000 foot-candles."

Turning from the study of the direct effect of poor lighting on the eyes, Dr. Luckiesh had to evolve some intricate and ingenious apparatus to show how poor light affects the nerves and the functioning of the muscles.

In being tested with this apparatus the subject was seated at a table. A book was propped up in front of him. He was told, as he read, to keep his finger on a button and to press it at the end of every page.

America's Farmers Are Building Firm Base for Nation's Coming Prosperity

Expert Points to Them as the Pioneers of Our Day.

By Harry J. Boyts, Live Stock Commissioner, Sioux City, Ia.

Greater miracles are being performed on the farms of America today than in the Capital City or at any gathering of economists. While new ideas and new plans are in the making and we are challenged by the new deal for agriculture, the practical and successful operations on many farms of our land and the wholesome living of rural life thrill us with the achievements of a free citizenship.

When young men like John Young and his brothers, of Burt County, Nebr., can pay an inherited mortgage, construct fine new improvements, and finance more land by well-managed farming in recent years, surely these changing times have spurred the red-blooded youth of this country. Our civilization still urges us to duplicate the amazing achievements of our pioneer fathers and mothers who built the Middle West. The men and women who maintain our agriculture are on the farms sowing and reaping and building a permanent structure that withstands the high tides and low ebbs of oceanic prosperity and depression.

Most Relief Lecturers Shy of Brains.

Some are restless with impatience, and many have taken advantage of the recent sympathy for new alignments for agriculture. The "Farm Relief Lecturer," as common as our difficulties, often puts no more brains into his enthusiasm than a certain leader in the Sioux City, Iowa, farm strike of 1933. This man, so the story runs, became ill while talking to an aroused farm group. He was taken to a local hospital for medical attention, and upon investigation it was found that his brain was entirely gone. Too many relief lecturers have about as much gray matter behind their theories as this dummy. Every new theory must be tested and weighed by practice before its value is really known. Theory without practice is useless.

As a live stock man, I want to point out that our population has increased 60 per cent since 1900, and our hog production is only 12 per cent greater than it was at the beginning of the century. While we have lost part of our export trade for pork products, we have imported rapidly increasing amount of coconut oil, which is cheaper than lard. In 20 years our importations of coconut oils have increased from 86,000,000 pounds annually to 652,000,000 pounds each year. Our loss of pork exports amounts to about 700,000,000 pounds annually, which could be offset by the prevention of the importation of these coconut oils.

Another important factor in the market for pork products is the competition of many widely advertised foods to replace meat in the diet. Some of the best investments farmers have made have been the contributions to the National Livestock and Meat Board, which promotes the proper use of meat for consumption.

Regulation of our exports and imports of pork products and competitive products and the extension of educational work in meat consumption are more essential than National farm adjustment of production. Otherwise we shall face a continued reduction of our hog market.

Thousands of practical farmers all through the corn belt have reduced their hog production in proportion to the market demands, and the marginal hog producer who continues to overproduce is being forced out of the business. In the program of Government help he often gets more cash benefits for reducing than the average producer, who has been a hog raiser for a long time.

The United States is like the rich young ruler of the Bible, whom Christ told to sell his goods and give to the poor if he would find contentment and happiness. This we are gradually doing and it will help agriculture, as it will help all business.

Perry G. Holden, the noted Iowa agriculturist of the International Harvester Co., told a story at a Le Mars, Iowa, Farmers Institute several years ago that is appropriate today. Mr. Holden is a great believer in country life, and he has always emphasized living on the farm. He said: "As I was driving through your city, I saw men moving dirt and I assumed they were digging for a sewer or a grave for a retired farmer. At least I suppose it was some public improvement." This story was told to drive home a point, and not for any offense, for Mr. Holden has a human heart as big as humanity. He saw the making of farm home life the great objective of farming.

In some way, new emphasis must be placed on country living. I want to bring new optimism for farming, and not to debate a nationally planned agriculture. In all the government farm adjustment planning, we should not expect too many miracles to come out of Washington.

In making agriculture pay, our best guides are successful farmers. Today, we can learn more important lessons about agriculture on the farms than elsewhere. The big majority of the land owners in this country do not have mortgages on their farms. They are meeting the problems of the depression and there we find practices that are revolutionizing agriculture. The farm experiences and adjustments being made are the greatest hope for a profitable agriculture.

"Stick to your experience" is the advice and practice of Julius Muecke, of Hinton, Iowa. Mr. Muecke has accumulated 3,000 acres of rich Iowa land, plenty of funds for operating, and supplies for a rainy day. This has been done by practical farming and not by retiring. When his two home banks failed a few years ago and he was asked to finance a new bank, (and he had the cash to do it) he said: "No, I am a farmer and not a banker."

Another live stock man I know is called "Lucky," and this "Lucky" Anderson of South Dakota says, "When money is borrowed too many people overestimate their judgment and ability. They expect better

On the live stock farms of the Middle West there is still plenty of work and opportunity for the intelligent youth of the country. But prosperity on these farms must be regulated by proper effort and import laws, authorities say.

Here come some remarks made by two women doctors, at the instigation of the board of education, on how elementary school children carry themselves.

And if you want to know whether your particular child has the ideal posture, just do this:—

Watch the child in profile while standing naturally, and, in the mind's-eye, drop a straight line from the front of the ear to the forepart of the foot, and then note if the axes of the different segments of the body are parallel to this line.

In other words, make sure that the little rabbit does not slouch.—London Daily Express.

Movie Magicians Outdo Parlor Tricks; Pull Odd Marvels From Silver Screen

Hollywood magicians refuse to tell whether the "giant gorilla," which filmgoers saw escape on Broadway, spreading panic and destruction, was really a giant at all, or only a baby monkey made to look big. They do admit that he never walked on the Great White Way.

Their Bag of Scientific Illusions Is a Full One.

By Harry Goldsmith.

"Seeing is believing," is an old, old saying. But it does not hold true when it comes to much of what we see in the movies. Hollywood motion picture photographers and technicians can play more tricks and create more illusions with their cameras than a magician can pull rabbits or handkerchiefs out of a hat. If the hand of a magician is quicker than the eye, then a Hollywood technician working together with the cameraman is slicker than the slickest. Almost with every new picture he creates a new bag full of devices for producing magical illusions.

So real are these illusions and so perfectly undetectable, that as you sit watching the movie, you thrill at the storm at sea, almost scream when the tiger springs at the hero, gasp as two trains crash head on, shiver in the snow and ice, feel drenched in the rain and fog, gape at the actor playing in a dual role and talking with himself, shudder at the elephant stampede, wonder at the diver leaping into the river and jumping back out again, and marvel at the antique furniture and gorgeous marble structures.

Storms at Sea Created in Tank.

But out on the Hollywood studios it's all a fake—all make believe.

Your storm at sea takes place in a tank on the studio lot. In the tank is sturdily built the storm-tossed ship in miniature. Chutes 50 feet high and 100 feet long lead to the tank on each side. Down these chutes are dumped gallons and gallons of water. Plunging down the slides, the water hits a baffle at the bottom, hurdles high into the air, splashes over the ship's decks and surges about in the tank. When the scene is photographed it appears that the ship is plunging and lunging in a turbulent sea and really having a bad time of it, although the ship may not actually be moving.

As for fog, rain, frost, snow, icicles, these are "snaps" for technicians to produce. Fog—that's simple. If you were a Hollywood technician in need of a fog scene, you would make one of your own by taking some liquid vaseline, putting it into an atomizer and spraying it into the air. There the atomized globules of vaseline hang suspended for a while—and that's your fog. The liquid vaseline is also an excellent substance to make fighters look like they are sweating.

Leisure Time.

The New York Committee on the Use of Leisure Time has made its report. It does not pretend to show what should be done with the leisure time of the unemployed, as the purpose of the committee, appointed by the New York City branch of NRA, was to study the leisure needs of the public in the approaching industrial era when "the necessary work will be done in a shorter working day and a shorter working week." The committee, under the chairmanship of Raymond Fosdick, reaches the conclusion that the New York area provides ample uses for leisure time, but that the facilities are too little known and too unevenly distributed.

This doubtless is the case in other large cities which provide many parks, playgrounds and libraries which might be used to good advantage by adults. The study of the use of leisure time might well be undertaken everywhere for, as the committee points out, there is no use crying for the return to the day when men found sufficient satisfaction in the work of their hands. "Doubtless we should do all we can," the report says, "toward the promotion of interest-commanding jobs. It does not, however, seem . . . that the way out from industrial drudgery is backward toward the days of craftsmanship, toward the ideal of William Morris and Leo Tolstoi."

The machine age has its philosophic justification in the fact that machines make it possible for man to work less for his needs and receive more for his labor.

Obviously, as that stage approaches, the use of leisure becomes an important subject for investigation. Thus it behooves all communities, possessed of a social conscience, to examine the conditions of its "tools" of leisure—the facilities it provides for free or inexpensive recreation. In broad terms the big task is to "examine the new, democratic leisure, and to understand its social implications," realizing that "the leisure which in the past has been the prized possession of the few is now the universal right of the many." And, as Newton D. Baker says, "people should be permitted to use it in the way they want to use it."

If the community so plans that the better things be brought into competition with the worst, leaving the individual free to make his own choice and making the "better things" attractive, then there should be little cause for worry as an advancing machine age makes leisure available to all.

Thomas Mann Speaks.

Of the many great men exiled from Nazi Germany, Thomas Mann, whose flight was self-willed, is one of the most outstanding. By virtue of "The Magic Mountain," "Buddenbrooks," "Death in Venice" and other writings he has won imperishable repute as a literary artist. He is, also, one of the leading liberals produced by Germany in recent years. Although he was not forced to leave his native land, he did so voluntarily as a protest against the trend of events there. He arrived in New York last week for a brief visit and, on the day of his arrival, was interviewed. Standing on the deck of the liner, he spoke.

"Perhaps this New Deal is a dictatorship," he said, "but it is based upon democracy. This is still a republic, and will always be, and because that is so your President is having more success today than the leader of any other nation. He is taking the wind out of the sail of Fascism."

As has been the case for many years, the rest of the world, in dark moments, still looks toward America as the land of hope. Europeans still think of us as the New World and (except when they recall the war debts) admire our youthfulness, our enthusiasms, our natural vitality. Thus, looking across the waters, they see the lights rather than the shadows in our experimentation. The Fascism that has overwhelmed so much of Europe is not, they say enviously, for us. And if we keep our heads clear, and walk warily, they may be right in that pleasant prediction.

Our people, however, can learn from Europe, now as they always have. When Thomas Mann contrasts the imperialism of the Grand Siecle in France, so rich in its literary and philosophic output, with the nationalism which has driven him and other writers from Germany of today, one's ears become attentive. In the Grand Siecle, says Mann, imperialism was aristocratic and based, at least externally, on ideals. Present nationalism "is really based on the hunger for profits," and that, our famous visitor points out, is not so good a soil for literature.

On every hand men of such intellectual honesty as Thomas Mann are warning against the ruin of Fascism. One and all declare that its advent marks the exodus of creative thought. Oppressed by the "drug of nationalism," they lament the passing of democracy in their native lands. In America democracy still exists, theoretically and actually. If our own writers, intellectuals and artists would listen to the mature expressions of those who have suffered most from the extremes of nationalist dictatorships in Europe, they might be less inclined to assume that democracy is necessarily doomed, and more useful by contributing to that ceaseless vigilance which is the price of its salvation.

A Disappointing Message.

The President's debt message is not the provocatively unfriendly document that some critics have assumed it to be. It consists in large part of a dispassionate review of the history of negotiations since declaration of the Hoover moratorium, followed by a reaffirmation of the American position that debts are solemn obligations which the debtor governments should make every effort to discharge.

Although the President says that the American people are not disposed to place an impossible burden upon the debtor states, he insists upon substantial sacrifices in order to relieve our taxpayers of burdens which they must otherwise shoulder. He suggests, too, that debtor countries might apply sums used for unproductive nationalistic expenditures to meet payments on war debts. This reference is interpreted to mean that outlays for armaments should be cut—a suggestion of interference in the domestic affairs of sovereign states that will naturally and properly be resented.

The chief ground for criticizing these proposals, however, lies in the President's failure to realize that collections on debt account present problems radically different from transfers on debt account. Whether a debtor country squanders its resources on armaments or conserves them carefully, does not affect the fact that transfers on debt account place a heavy strain on the exchanges, upset the entire commercial balance between nations and force trade to seek new channels. The President has nowhere conceded the demoralizing effects of heavy dead-weight debt payments upon international trade, except possibly in an ambiguous reference acknowledging a willingness to discuss the "special circumstances relating to means and method of payment."

Furthermore he refuses to admit a connection between reparations and war debts, despite the insistence of the debtors that the two problems are indissolubly linked together. So long as the Germans could borrow abroad to cover deficits on external account, they were able to transfer reparations payments to our debtors and the latter, in turn, could make payment to the United States. The collapse of this system of uncontrolled international lending, which induced nations to borrow in order to pay their debts, and also to contract fresh debts in order to buy goods, has been followed by a prolonged depression for which the war debts-reparations tangle is at least partly responsible. Whether we admit it or not, therefore, reparations and war debts are economically and politically linked together, and the disappearance of the former means that payment of the latter will be resisted.

Even if debtor states were willing to resume payment of annuities on a substantial scale, the transfer problem would be practically insoluble. Efforts to acquire dollars to discharge these obligations would drive up the value of our currency in terms of foreign money—a result that conflicts with our efforts to keep dollar exchange values down. Gold shipments would soon become impossible, and, if made, would destroy hopes of an early return to the gold standard. Finally, endeavors to accumulate credit balances through increased sales of goods in the United States would certainly encounter the opposition of our protected industries.

The effective part of our debtors' complaint is that we demand payment and refuse to receive it and pursue monetary and tariff policies that are not adapted to our position as a creditor state. Neither the threats of Congress nor the milder admonitions of the President show the slightest appreciation of the force of these arguments. We appear to be no nearer an agreement in principle with our debtors than we were when the controversy over revision started. And the seeming inability of the President to make any constructive advance toward settlement is an uncomfortable reflection on his ability to disregard politics in facing a relatively simple economic problem.

Groping In The Dark.

Although the silver reserve bill has passed the House by a vote of 263 to 77, widespread dissatisfaction with this compromise plan apparently exists within the ranks of those who voted for it. In the course of debate fears were frequently voiced that the discretionary character of the legislation might cause the silver-buying program to lapse. Representative Martin even went so far as to say that "unless the permissive power in this bill is carried out, there will be a Secretary of the Treasury going back to little old New York."

Some very able speeches against the measure were delivered by members who alleged that the hoped for rise in domestic prices would not result from silver purchases, so long as the country remains on a gold standard internationally. It was also pointed out that fiat money could be put into circulation more cheaply by printing paper dollars than by buying silver and issuing certificates against it.

The argument that Eastern silver-using countries would be benefited by an advance in silver prices was effectually refuted by Representative Christianson. As he said: "The people of the Orient use the trade balances they create in exchanging their raw materials for our manufactured goods to acquire silver for hoarding. The purchasing power of Asia has not suffered from the low price of silver and would not be enhanced if an increase in the value of silver should result from this legislation." Mr. Christianson's opinions are strongly supported by a visiting Chinese banker, who told the New York Bankers Club that "China, like every other country, pays for her imports chiefly by her exports" and the silver in her possession "does not help much in her purchases abroad."

Despite a general conflict of views, it appears to be quite generally conceded that the silver-buying program will permit speculators in silver to obtain subsidies, at least equal to 50 per cent of the profits obtained from sales at advanced prices. However, some doubts were even expressed as to the efficacy of the plan as an expedient for raising prices.

To judge from the character of the debate the House did not know what the silver-buying plan was designed to accomplish, nor what its objective ought to be. It did not stop to consider the effect of this latest experiment upon the previously announced policy of raising prices to 1926 levels and restoring the then existing relationship between agricultural and industrial prices. Instead it went blindly ahead to do something for silver, without stopping to ask what such legislation may do to a country that greatly needs a respite from constant aimless tinkering with our currency system.

"Gag" Rule In The House.

Majority leaders in the House of Representatives have decided to throw off all pretense of legislating as that term is properly understood. During the remainder of the session the attempt will be made, under suspension of the rules, to railroad through bills indorsed by the Administration. The opposition will be muzzled, debate will be sharply limited, amendments will be taboo. The fact that this will require a two-thirds majority for passage of legislation does not offset the offensiveness of the technique to democratic principles.

In one respect, this unprecedented "gag" rule is an appropriate capstone for procedure during the present session. Speaker Rainey has not hesitated to use arbitrary tactics to hasten enactment of important bills. Under the guise of emergency, legislation has been passed before its text was available to members, before bills could be adequately considered or properly shaped into workable laws. For the most part the House has played the role of a subservient council of indorsement. Its vital function as a legislative body responsible to the people, not to the "brain trust," has been forgotten.

Anyone who studies the drastic powers over legislation assumed by the Speaker may well inquire what benefits are being derived from the so-called lame duck amendment to the Constitution. When Congress was forced to adjourn on March 4 filibusters were frequent and drastic rules were sometimes adopted to force legislation through before a session expired. But that excuse for such tactics has been removed. Congress can and should remain in session until its work is done.

The attempt to rush through far-reaching measures, including the blank-check relief bill, the housing program, the agricultural amendments and the bill creating a regulatory Communications Commission is a menace to the recovery program. Hasty and ill-considered action has already placed on the statute books several measures that tend to obstruct normal economic recuperation. No benefits which might result from an early adjournment could balance the risk of further legislation of this character.

Obstructive maneuvers by minorities in the House can not, of course, be condoned. But there is a question as to where adequate debate ends and filibustering begins. Impatient House leaders are inclined to regard any full discussion of an issue as a filibuster. Consequently, when the White House puts a bill on the "must" calendar they bring out a drastic rule assuring its passage after 40 minutes of debate and precluding any right of amendment. This dictatorial procedure now appears to have become the routine of the House for the remainder of the session.

No Excuse For Fraud.

"We were living in a fast age, and every one was trying to get rich fast," said C. Elbert Anadale, following his parole from prison. His reference was to the so-called boom period when the F. H. Smith Co., of which he was a vice president, swindled large numbers of Washingtonians out of their savings. Not "everybody," Mr. Anadale. And if this remark was intended to condone the actions of those who swindled in their scramble to get rich quick, it is an ineffective even though an honest admission.

The parole board released Mr. Anadale because it found that he was dominated by G. Bryan Pitts, chief wrecker of the F. H. Smith Co., and because he seems to have derived no personal gains from the conspiracies of that company's officers. But it denied an application for parole by Edmund D. Rheem, executive head of Swartzell, Rheem & Hensey, now defunct firm of real estate brokers. Rheem sought release on the ground that losses resulting from his operations were due to the economic reverses of the country as a whole. But the board did not consider this sufficient reason to justify his fraud.

An unfortunate attitude toward crimes of this sort, committed during the heyday of prosperity, is cultivated in some quarters. Fraud, betrayal of trust, embezzlement and other dishonest practices are not made less obnoxious because the ravages of depression coincided with losses brought about by swindlers. Those who are actually guilty of defrauding the public in "get-rich-quick" schemes deserve to pay the full penalty for their crimes. If parasites scrambling to amass fortunes from other people's money had been restrained in the "fast age," the depression doubtless would have been much less severe.

The Post Impressionist

Touching Some Moderns

Postoffice, Sunday.

HAVING survived the shower of compliments tossed toward his imitations of the elder poets, Edward Peale—we must know him well enough by now to drop the "Mr."—has turned to the moderns. He says that O*d*n N*sh, extraordinary because of his extraordinary sense of rhyme rather than because of his sense of rhythm—ought to have written this "Pen-Portrait of the Author as a Poet:"

Og (but not the King of Bashan)
Writes strange rhymes for our delectashan.
In days gone by a poet by the name of Browning
Wrote more plausible ones and quite as astowning.
Og has plenty of esprit;
But some people think Browning has as much of it.
Besides, Browning had some technique;
Og has only his tongue in his chique.

Whereupon, under the title of "Records," our poet adds:

They tell me there's no rhyme for window.
"Demised millionaire leaves none of his kin dough."

They tell me there's no rhyme for twelfth.
"Bootlegger gives orphanage all his enormous welfth."

They tell me there's no rhyme for eighth.
"Carnera reported falling off in weighth."

And thus, continues Peale, should that idol of some of our contemporaries, E*g*r Gst, write "The Home-Guest:"

My dear, I really wonder why;
You do look queer. No other girl
Has such a bright and bluish eye,
Nor hair in such a tidy curl.

I think that it must be your hat.
But come, this evening I do have
My weekly wages, and with that
We'll purchase you a hat more brave.

I never hold with modern ways
Of thought, which says a wife must slave;
All days can not be Saturdays,
But say, today can! Let's be brave!

Let's buy a hat like other girls',
Not lavish, but the very best;
I will adorn your darling curls,
My life-time boarder, my home-guest!

If every man would treat his wife
Like I'm accustomed to treat you,
He'd have a nice home-guest for life,
To always keep his sky bright blue!

Nor—so Peale assures us—did delightful T. A. Daly object when shown this Peale reminiscence of Giuseppe da Barber, "Gather Ye Rosebuds:"

Giuseppe da barber he lika da rose.
He steecka wan ovra hees ear when he knows
He stand in some place where no 'Merican goes.

But if he sees po-liceman comin', he drop
In hees pocket. Giuseppe no lika da cop
Talla fella, "You maka jud' lika da wop."

Giuseppe he tal me, "Dey fade vera queeck;
You get heem wan evenin', nex' morin' he seeck.
Lika girl," say Giuseppe; "Dat's true w'at I speak.

"You gon' fade lika rose, leetla girl," say Giusepp';
"You gon' lose your complexion, your laughtra, your pep.
You gon' limp when you try to dance any new step.

"Taka my advice, catcha some boy on da fly.
Yas, I know dey don' lika da marriage; dey shy.
But you'll grab heem more easier now dan bimeby."

Yet we are under the impression that "Our Hired Boy" was not submitted to the poetic chronicler of folks "North of Boston," R*b*rt Fr*st:

Our hired boy, a couple of days ago,
While he was out a-shoveling the snow,
Stopped to see how the willow branches hung
Frozen into the brook, and thought he was stung
Severely in his left hand thumb; but come
To look, a chipmunk had bit off his thumb.

Malvina heard him screech, and ran; and I,
Leaving some poems I'd written to get dry,
Joined her outside and helped him through the shed,
And put him in the parlor bedroom bed.
And though I was distracted when he'd moan,
I had to notice how the snow was blown
In ridges just as regular, but small,
As in that film we had at the town hall,
And thought how pleased a body'd be to go
And see the Desert all like yellow snow.

Malviny said hot water drew out pain;
I called it thumbs will grow right on again,
That all you need to do to make them graft,
Is bandage them. But hired boys are daft,
Or at the very least I say they're dumb;
I want that you should know he'd lost that thumb.

June in the Stratosphere

(From the Scientific Monthly for June.)

PLANS are being formulated for a balloon ascent into the stratosphere early in June, under the joint auspices of the National Geographic Society and the United States Army Air Corps. Maj. William E. Kepner, an outstanding balloon pilot, and Capt. Albert W. Stevens, aerial photographer, both of the United States Army Air Corps, will participate in the flight.

The ascent is being made to obtain information concerning upper regions of the atmosphere. There is no desire to perform a "stunt" or to establish an altitude record for its own sake.

The specific projects to be carried out include:

Temperature and barometeric measurements from the earth to the "ceiling" of the flight; a check on barometer measurements of altitude by optical methods; a camera of accurately determined focal length, mounted in the bottom of the gondola, to photograph the earth, making it possible through subsequent map studies to compile more accurate altitude tables than those now in use; bottling of air samples at various altitudes, samples being brought to earth and analyzed for gas composition and relative humidity; ascertainment of electrical condition of the atmosphere from the 5,000-foot level to the flight "ceiling;" recording cosmic ray intensity, penetration and direction of movement at various levels; wind direction and velocity studies; measurement of solar radiation; photography of the solar spectrum; record of sky brightness; oblique photography for distance, and test of actinic value of light and secondary absorption by the atmosphere; effects of altitude on radio transmission.

Other projects may be added if the time of the observers permits and if satisfactory methods can be worked out. Efforts are being made, for example, to devise satisfactory plans and equipment to ascertain the presence of ozone at high levels. The ozone in the upper air can not be determined from the air samples brought to earth, as the gas is unstable and will break down into ordinary oxygen.

Two and one-third acres of cotton cloth are being used to build the bag; and it will contain, fully inflated, 3,000,000 cubic feet of gas. It will be about one-thirteenth filled with hydrogen when it leaves the ground. Room must be left for great expansion of the hydrogen in the upper air where pressure is light.

The gondola will be an airtight hollow ball of Dow metal, a light magnesium alloy, 8 feet 4 inches (100 inches) in diameter. The shell of the globe will be slightly less than one-fifth of an inch thick. Inside, vertical tubular posts will strengthen the shell and maintain the globular shape against the strains created by the suspension and the heavy load of instruments and ballast. In the lower part of the gondola a floor of metal 60 inches in diameter will be constructed for the convenience of the two operators.

The point of take-off will be somewhere in the western United States near the eastern edge of the Rocky Mountains. It is estimated that the balloon will drift about 600 miles to the east, southeast or northeast before dusk. With the take-off near the Rockies the landing should be made in the open country, permitting salvage of the bag.

The Week Abroad

By Andre Vulliet.

SPARKS, such as flew at the Disarmament Conference last week, had not been seen in international parleys since the Young plan conference at The Hague in 1929.

Sharp, thin-lipped Phillip Snowden, then Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, venomously ridiculed Henry Cheron, elder French Finance Minister. Bald and respectable, Cheron at the time puffed and burst into indignation. But, fat and jovial, he cooled down and finally took it.

Last week, statesmen assembled in Geneva saw an angry French Foreign Minister try the same trick on his British colleague. Louis Barthou, put off his temper by the implications of Sir John Simon, tall, cool and irritating, unleashed his best brand of Gallic irony and flung it at the Englishman. But if you try and "ridicule" an Oxford man before 13 foreign ministers and the jam of an international set, he will not "take it." Sir John will probably never forget and his already mild love for France will not be strengthened.

* * * *

SIR JOHN had implied that the collapse of the Disarmament Conference was to be blamed on France, that there would be no agreement without Germany's rearmament and that "unless it be possible to agree upon suggestions like those in the British memorandum," no convention would be realized.

Putting the blame on France may be a sign of resentment on the part of Britain for the failure of the separate negotiations on the arms issue she carried on in Paris, Rome and Berlin ever since Germany left Geneva.

Britain's attitude may also be regarded as in line with her tradition not to allow any nation or group of nations to work out a new balance of power in Europe as France and the Soviet are doing now.

* * * *

BARTHOU, in his eagerness to tell Simon where to get off, went off his track. He said a few things he had not prepared and probably forgot to develop several important points.

Among the things he said was this: "I can well understand that paternity has its illusions. My honorable colleague Simon conceived the British plan and his paternity has so many illusions that he tells us there has been only one concrete project submitted to the conference. My eminent colleague Mussolini, who certainly is not a man incapable of paternity, also has his child." Barthou was referring to the Italian plan calling for limited arms for Germany while France would not be requested to scrap her own.

This paragraph gave rise to much comment. Did it mean that France's opposition to a certain rearmament of Germany was not so dead set as all that and that the French, while they thought it was in their interest, juridically, to set the wrong upon Germany, realized that, practically, they set the world's blame upon themselves? Or did Barthou merely doff his hat at Mussolini in a friendly gesture?

Among the points the French Minister failed to clear are the following: He did not propose any new solution, which, to a certain extent, was expected since France insisted on transferring disarmament discussions to Geneva. He brought no comment on the speech Soviet Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff had made the day before.

* * * *

RUSSIA'S complete about-face was one of the most spectacular developments Geneva ever witnessed. While the Soviet had always advocated total disarmament with little, if any, measure to guarantee peace, his position now was: security first, through local pacts of mutual assistance that may progressively become the nucleus of larger combinations. Russian policy has of late been directed consistently along this line.

"Who can say," Litvinoff declared, "whether the reinforcement of security and the effect it will have on aggressively inclined governments will not create conditions enabling us to take up once more the problem of disarmament with greater chances of success?"

Commenting upon the absence from the League of Japan and Germany, the Soviet organ Pravda, speaking for a vast, sprawling empire of 170,000,000 souls, wondered last week "whether the League could not, to a certain degree, become the center of united forces that are ready to delay the bloody settlement of disputes and bring about at least some strengthening of peace."

* * * *

ITALY'S position was perhaps defined ten days ago by a disheartening statement of her Duce that "we should never have spoken of disarmament" since "war, bearing the same relation to man as maternity bears to woman, was perhaps the tragic destiny of man."

At the same time a new program of armaments was announced and last week in Geneva Italy's spokesmen were mute. So were all the papers about her attitude on both the arms or the League issues. While wires from the capitals of Europe were buzzing flashing comments, Rome kept aloof.

It looked as though she were cautiously keeping on the sideline, trying to pick out the winner. Eventually, if such is her interest, she may join the Franco-Russian or any other team.

It may not be long before the Frankfurter Zeitung, the last survivor of the great liberal papers of Germany, will in turn undergo Nazi regimentation. The family which has owned it since its foundation has surrendered to "old and proved friends."

It is understood that Baron Constantin von Neurath, German foreign minister, will see to it that its editorial policy be not changed, as at least "one" independent newspaper seems necessary. Even the most authoritarian kings felt the need of a jester to tell them the truth every now and then.

Hitler's Grip on Reich Recalls 'Heilige Vehme' Terror of Old

Charlemagne Employed Savage System to "Christianize."

Like Our Klan, It Spread Terror While Hiding Behind Masks.

By Anton Angelo.

IT was inevitable, perhaps, that Hitlerism in Germany should give rise to a terrorist secret organization similar to the American Ku Klux Klan. The sole difference is that the German organization—based on a revival of an awe-inspiring medieval order known as "Die Heilige Vehme"—goes far beyond the sphere of the Klan in its scope of hate and terror.

The principal animosities of the present Vehme are directed against Socialists, Communists and Jews. Of course, if one has made himself persona non grata to the Nazis—even though he does not belong to one of the prescribed groups—he may as well make his peace with God unless he finds a way to clear out.

Many prominent Germans are on the blacklist. Among them are Dr. Albert Einstein, the world-renowned physicist who is temporarily on the faculty of Princeton University, and Lion Feuchtwanger, the noted author.

According to letters smuggled out of Germany, the Vehme is especially active in Catholic Bavaria because of the scorn of many of the inhabitants for Hitlerism, but the terrorism extends throughout all Germany. Usually the victims just disappear.

• • • •

THE origin of the "Heilige Vehme" is traced back to Charlemagne, who founded it, at first, to suppress heresies among the Saxons whom he had conquered and attempted to Christianize by force. Hence the adjective "heilige" (holy). The word "vehme" is an old German word that has defied translation. Gradually it gave rise to the adjective "verfehmt," meaning "proscribed."

Charlemagne was by no means the just and benign ruler pictured in some history books. Above all, it must be noted, that, having finally subdued the ferocious Saxons under the brave chieftain, Wittekind, he had more than 4,000 Saxons publicly beheaded simply because they had impeded his conquests.

The old Saxons, however, were a spirited race. Many of them were faithful to their old Teutonic gods and ignored their Christian mentors. The "backsliders" steadily grew in number.

In desperation, the bishops appealed to Charlemagne. He issued edicts against the heretics. The warnings, going unheeded, were followed by executions. Still the heresies persisted. It was then that Charlemagne founded the "Heilige Vehme."

So barbarous were the acts of Charlemagne's Vehme in Saxony that the heretics capitulated within a short time. Then Charlemagne devoted his attention to Westphalia, where he was confronted with open rebellion by the still pagan population.

Westphalia soon became the very apex of terrorism and horror. Charlemagne appointed secret judges, empowering them first to punish persons guilty of heresy, then extending the list of crimes coming within the scope of the judges to include fraud, perjury, larceny and other offenses.

• • • •

THERE was no previous warning for anyone accused. They were allowed no defense. Judgment was rendered in secret by masked judges and the defendants were executed by hanging, decapitation or disemboweling—often after indescribable tortures.

Heresy finally was stamped out, but the Vehme courts were not disbanded. Their headquarters at that time was in the City of Dortmund, the capital of Westphalia, where Charlemagne lived.

The Vehme then extended its jurisdiction over all Germany. The judges, called scabini, or assessors, were unknown to the populace. Secret rights were devised to inspire awe and terror. The names of persons condemned were written in a book and the execution entrusted to one of the younger assessors.

It was inevitable that an organization of such tremendous power should abuse its prerogatives and go far beyond its original scope.

The Vehme began to meddle with civil affairs and people's private lives. The courts finally assumed most of the characteristics of the notorious Spanish inquisition, founded several centuries later, and even went farther than the terrorists of the inquisition.

• • • •

AT first, condemned persons were executed, without previous warning, but, after, the death of Charlemagne, the Vehme courts, growing more sure of themselves, and perhaps to inspire greater terror, began to notify the accused by sending them writs to appear before the terrible court at a stated time.

Six weeks and three days were allowed for the appearance of the accused. In case the accused was a nobleman and took refuge in a fortified castle, an assessor would journey there, cut out three flips from a wooden rail and place a coin and the writ of citation in the incision. He kept the three flips as a sign that he had executed his commission and called out to the porter of the castle, directing him to inform the man who has taken refuge within that he would find the writ in the rail.

If the accused could not be found, the assessors proclaimed him "guilty to all the world." After proclaiming the name of the accused four times, commanding him to attend and answer the charge, the judge usually announced:

"In consequence of the supreme law, which Charlemagne sanctioned, and which princes, counts and nobles in Germany have sworn to observe, I cast this man from the highest to the lowest degree. I deprive him of all privileges, liberties, immunities and rights; I subject him to the royal ban, to hatred, to execrations, to hostility and to the greatest possible punishment which can be conceived by man. I render him incapable of all law and pardon. Lastly, according to the laws of this tribunal, I condemn him to death. I adjudge his neck to the halter, his body to birds of prey, to be consumed in the air; his soul I commend to God; his fiefs and estates, if he has any, I pronounce to have lapsed to the sovereign. I declare his wife a widow, and his children orphans. His blood I declare attainted for all times."

If the accused appeared before any Vehme tribunal, sentence was executed right then and there.

• • • •

IN the course of centuries, the Vehme grew even more bolder. Growing tremendously wealthy through the confiscation of the properties of persons they condemned, the order inspired dread among the people. The courts intimidated princes and nobles, even the emperor himself, when he threatened the Vehme with suppression.

During the sixteenth the whole nation rose up in wrath and sent special delegates to the Diet at Frankfort to stamp out this terror, but for a long time all such efforts proved in vain.

In 1535, an edict of the Emperor Charles V again condemned their abuses, but failed to abolish the Vehme. As late as 1640, Thomas Schlirstein, counsellor to the Elector Friedrich Wilhelm of Brandenburg, known in history as the Great Elector, drew up vituperative accusations against the City of Herforden, where the Vehme was unusually active.

The Great Elector succeeded thereupon in abolishing the Vehme within his jurisdiction. But the organization continued throughout the rest of Germany until the close of the eighteenth century.

Such is the history of the medieval Vehme, on the basis of which the Nazis have revived the modern Vehme.

Anyone who believes, however, that such an organization can not endure for any great length of time is not familiar with the character of the German people. The old Vehme had lasted for fully seven centuries. The people were terrified, but they did not revolt. Only the invasion of Germany by Napoleon's army finally succeeded in stamping out the Vehme entirely.

Did Lincoln Ever Paddle His Canoe?

A writer in the Manchester Guardian attributes to Abraham Lincoln the phrase, "Paddle your own canoe," but the usually reliable Mr. Bartlett does not bear him out. In fact, Mr. Bartlett does not mention it at all, though certainly not from indifference.

Lincoln, of course, could have said it. Its terse simplicity is characteristic of him and, to a pioneer such as he was, the phrase would have been freighted with meaning. We are inclined to doubt, however, that the Sangamon River ever witnessed Lincoln's long and ungainly figure in so frail and temperamental a craft. His entrance into the ordinary birch-bark canoe would have invited it to capsize.

Of course, if Lincoln coined the phrase, it was not intended to have the connotation of dolce far niente, of careless, dreamy hours on the water. It was an injunction to be self-reliant, to do one's own navigation through life. Old Abe preferred other forms of laziness to drifting aimlessly in little boats.

Right to Vote in D. C. Held a National Issue

Advantages of Suffrage Declared Secondary to Need of U. S. for Governmental Seat Where Congress is Supreme; Precedent for Other "City States" Feared.

By Merlo J. Pusey.

SUFFRAGE in the District of Columbia has been a perennial issue for more than 130 years. When the seat of Federal Government was transferred to the banks of the Potomac in 1800, the few scattered inhabitants of the District were more concerned over municipal elections than the right to vote for candidates for Congress, President and Vice President. Now the emphasis seems to have shifted to National representation. But the general problem remains much the same.

Powerful traditions and unassailable principles are repeatedly brought to the support of proposals to enfranchise the citizens of Washington. The suffragists have no difficulty in convincing the public that residents of the Capital City should have the right to vote. Cries of taxation without representation still carry an emphatic appeal to the American mind. Moreover, as was pointed out by Senator Capper, in connection with his proposed constitutional amendment to give the District voting representation in the Senate, the House and the Electoral College, Washington has a population greater than eight of the States which send two Senators each to Congress.

These are obvious arguments. They are based on the solid foundation of representative government. But they merely skim over the surface of the problems that have arisen out of the peculiar status of the District.

THE issue is not simply one of granting nearly 500,000 citizens living in Washington the right to vote. The District was created specifically to provide a Capital for the Federal Government. All jurisdiction over this small area was granted to Congress so that no State might exercise any degree of control over the National authorities. It is evident that all other political functions here must be subordinated to this central objective.

In writing for the Federalist, Madison pointed out "the indispensable necessity of complete authority at the seat of Government." He assumed, however, that residents of the District would be allowed to elect "a municipal legislature for local purposes." Indeed, one of the first acts of Congress (1802) with regard to government here made Washington a "body politic and corporate." Three municipalities within the District—Georgetown, Alexandria and Washington—elected their mayors and city councils for many years.

Congress yielded in 1871 to the argument that people of the District should be granted a larger degree of control over local affairs, as well as national representation. All the local units were abolished. Restricted legislative powers over the entire District were vested in an Assembly, consisting of a council appointed by the President and a House of Delegates elected by popular vote. Executive powers were delegated to a Governor and two administrative boards. Even with this set-up Congress retained supreme legislative authority. The District was permitted to elect a delegate to the House of Representatives, but, like the delegates of other territories, he had no vote.

CHARGES of financial irregularities brought about a Congressional investigation in 1874 and the "territorial government" came to an end three years and 19 days after its beginning. Congress then established the commission form of government. After four years it was made permanent and has persisted until the present time.

Through these various changes the distinctive character of the District as the seat of Federal Government has been preserved. The rule of Congress may become extremely distasteful to local residents. Both justice and tradition may demand enfranchisement of residents here. Yet the necessity of maintaining a seat of government wherein the will of Congress will always be supreme rises above even these important objectives.

Any local government would of necessity, therefore, be seriously curtailed in its legislative functions and divided authority usually results in friction, misunderstanding and often stagnation. So long as our municipal government, headed by three Commissioners, tries to reflect the will of the people, keeps local agencies free from graft and maintains a reasonable degree of efficiency, it is difficult to see that any actual advantages would be gained by reverting to a hybrid form of popular government.

The problem of District representation in Congress is even more complicated. The Capper proposal would modify the very foundation of the American system of government. It would give to a territory which is not a State, and can never become one, the privileges that are now reserved to the States.

The question of Congressional representation for the District becomes, therefore, an issue of broad National significance. It is extremely doubtful whether the States will ever vote to extend a privilege that is now exclusively theirs to a political unit of a lower order. Moreover, it is agreed that representation for the District would set a precedent for the creation of other "city-States" that would demand the same privilege. Chicago, for example, is trying to secure release from the jurisdiction of Illinois. A number of large cities would like to have their own Senators and Representatives in Washington. No one can say that National suffrage here would thus lead to a breakdown of our State governments, but it would certainly be a major change in the basis upon which the Federal Government was built.

MANY thousands of Government employes and other residents of the Capital vote by mail. Most of them would doubtless continue to do so, even if the District should be granted suffrage, because of greater interest in affairs "back home" and a desire to maintain political affiliations there. To opponents of suffrage who are apprehensive over the Negro vote this is a most significant fact. They point out that votes which would actually be cast in the District are quite evenly divided between the Republican and Democratic parties, and that the Negroes would therefore hold the balance of power.

Once again, it is difficult to forecast just how this situation would work out. But the large Negro population of Washington certainly justifies consideration of this viewpoint. Stimulation of racial politics in the Nation's Capital is not a pleasant prospect.

When considered from all angles, the assumption that suffrage would be a boon to the people of Washington undergoes some rather drastic adjustments. Most of the arguments used by the anti-suffragists do not apply to local voting for Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, but the suffrage movement seldom makes clear distinctions. It proceeds on the general theory that all adult citizens ought to have the right of expressing their preferences at the polls. But this theory, like all others, is sound only in so far as it doesn't run away from fact. A more realistic approach would eliminate romantic objectives, even though it might not afford a solution.

Defender of "Marriage Clause" Rebukes Its Opponents as Too Selfish to Give "Other Fellow" a Break.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Among our many judicial agencies is one designated as the Equity Court. This court functions in cases where there appears some great injustice has been done. In order to get relief from this tribunal one must of necessity seek its advantages "with clean hands." That is to say, they must be honest in their convictions, their cause must be void of deception and their contentions must be conclusively sincere.

The advocates of repeal of the "Marriage Clause" of the economy act are pleading publicly that this law is unjust and their principal, if not their only argument, is "that women have a perfect right to work." They know very well that no one has denied that privilege, but for the want of something better to becloud the issue, the advocates of repeal continually use this phrase.

Now here is the reason for the enactment of the "Marriage Clause." The Congress inserted this clause in order to more equitably apportion government jobs among the people, especially to give employment to some man having a wife and little children to feed. It was a humane gesture of the Congress to help some poor devil who is daily walking the streets trying to find work in order to keep body and soul together. The latter has absolutely nothing, not a penny in his pockets and wife and little kids are crying for food while on the other hand, we find Mr. and Mrs. So and So whose combined salaries are $3,600 or $3,800, in many cases considerably more. They are dressed in the finest of clothes and many of them also have a fine car and money in the bank (and, in the great majority of cases, no children).

It is nothing short of downright selfishness on the part of these married couples to want to hog these jobs and deny the man walking the streets, his right to work and support his wife and little children. Let these married couples put in a little of their time reading the "Golden Rule" and give sympathetic thought to the old adage, "Live and let live."

So you married couples come out in the open "with clean hands" and do not becloud this issue by hiding behind the misleading and weak contention that "women have the right to work."

A FELLOW WORKER.

Beggar Gets His Liquor.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

About 1 p. m. recently, I was passing the F street entrance to the Willard Hotel and saw a man panhandling on the sidewalk. He walked west on F street to Fifteenth street, south to Pennsylvania avenue, then east to Fourteenth street, which he crossed, and then a few steps further east on E street. In these three blocks I saw him approach nine people, six of whom made contributions. I saw only two coins which were given to him and these were quarters. I do not know how much he collected from the six. On E street he stepped into a liquor shop and I watched him make a purchase of a half pint of liquor. He then proceeded to the park across E street from the National Theater, joined a buddy, sat down on a bench and indulged freely in his recent purchase.

I think that I can safely say that in the past year I have not given any more than 50 cents to panhandlers. With equal safety I can say I have purchased no less than 100 meals for unfortunates within the past year, at a total cost of approximately $50. In practically all cases, the person approaching me has offered hunger as an explanation. I have, with very few exceptions, always offered to take the person to a lunchroom, sometimes having to walk three or four blocks to reach a lunchroom. In some cases, the person has decided he was not hungry.

I submit that if the public were urged to go to a little more trouble in ascertaining the real wants of the panhandler, that there would be less of this nuisance on the streets of Washington. PETER BURKE.

Indignation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

What is this thing called the NRA? And where? And what is it doing? Well, for one thing it is permitting flour and bread to sell at war-time prices while wheat sells at a very ordinary price.

General Johnson invited criticism and he is getting it. The NRA has proved to be a farce; a political pay roll for an army of useless officials and employes who are kept busy making out reports of what the officials are not doing; and all at public expense on funds that could be put to better use in relieving distress. Clarence Darrow is right.

Another Tea Party?

To the Editor of the Post—Sir:

So the "Old Age Pension Bill" received its "come uppance" as Booth Tarkington would say.

I suppose Mr. Blanton feels very chesty, when he sees how potent he is in the House and against the Senate.

Isn't it amusing to see how one man can be a majority? Do you not think it is time that the District ceased being without representation?

I think we had better have another "Tea Party." The old people of Texas may be proud of their champion, but I can't see how they can be.

How about it, old folks?

Supt. Ballou Assailed as "Provincial Minded" for Rejecting Survey Report That Hit School System.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have just digested the conclusions of the five-year study reached by a commission of the American Historical Association on Social Studies and also Superintendent F. W. Ballou's statement explaining why he refused to sign that report.

It seems to me that Dr. Ballou's explanation is a smoke screen to cover up his real reasons. When he says the "commission did not adequately investigate," I would like to inquire how many years it would require to "adequately investigate." The high standing, experience, and scholarship of the committee members ought to guarantee their fairness and intellectual maturity. Such nationally known, fair and impartial historians like Dr. Charles A. Beard ought to prove the absurdity of Dr. Ballou's charge of "bias."

The whole trouble with Superintendent Ballou is that he is provincial minded and does not realize it. This is proved when he refers the five-year report to a "Mr. Jones, head of the department of history and social studies in the junior and senior high schools for white pupils" in the District of Columbia. Now who is this authority?"

My impression is that Dr. Ballou, although sincere, is unfamiliar with conditions in the educational world outside of the District of Columbia.

When Dr. Ballou condemns the report because it is "destructive," he shows a fear psychology startlingly like that of the famous Superintendent Wirt, of Gary. Dr. Ballou should know by this time that the New Deal is destroying a lot of cherished individualistic ruggedness. There are a lot of things that must be destroyed. We can not make progress until a lot of pedagogical junk is scrapped. Those who are brought up in the old school of laissez faire, as Dr. Ballou was, find it hard to swallow the new order of collectivism as revealed in the report referred to.

Dr. Ballou wants a definite and detailed blue print to the New Jerusalem of education. He "views with horror" many of his pet theories thrown upon the junk heap, such as the idiotic unintelligence tests and a lot of other pedagogic piffle. These tests are thoroughly discredited now by most school men.

The real truth is in this whole controversy that the public schools have fallen down because they have been and still are dominated by the National Manufacturers Association, chambers of commerce, trade bodies, D. A. R., American Legion, and Rotary. The schools are dying of intellectual dry rot. REALIST.

Agrees With Byrd.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I would like to congratulate Senator Harry F. Byrd for his stand against the AAA farm plan. He is right; it would mean the end of all farm liberty.

Farmers have a very hard time now to educate their children and make a living on the farm. Many who used to be well off or rich are in debt now. People all over our beautiful country are half starved. Crime has become prevalent on account of these conditions. Some of them are too proud to let the public know they are in need, so they suffer in silence. Then, why place any restrictions on any crop the farmer may raise, when the surplus could be used to feed the needy.

Tragedy of The Isle of Pines

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

By the merest chance I have just read a reprint of a special descriptive article in The Post of January 15, 1933, on the Isle of Pines. It is a beautiful and accurate description of the Isle, but I wonder if some of the readers of The Post would care to learn of the tragic history of this isle?

After the Spanish-American War, President McKinley declared the isle American territory and if he had lived it would be that today, with probably 100,000 Americans having happy homes on this fascinating isle. President McKinley instructed the land commissioner of the Department of the Interior, Binger Hermann (later Congressman from Washington) "to be sure to put the Isle of Pines as a United States possession" on the new map the department was getting out about 1900 of the "United States and Its Possessions." Mr. Hermann later made an affidavit of this fact. The War Department also sent out letters to inquiring prospective settlers stating it was American territory. All these facts are covered in an extended speech of former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, delivered in the Senate in November, 1923.

President McKinley died, and Theodore Roosevelt, imposed upon by false statements and information, instructed Secretary of State Hay to negotiate a treaty with Cuba (known as the Hay-Quesada treaty) agreeing to turn over the sovereignty of the Isle to Cuba in consideration for two coal stations for which we had already paid cash. This treaty Theodore Roosevelt, Taft, Harding and Wilson could never get the Senate to ratify. In 1925 during the Coolidge administration it was ratified under very peculiar circumstances.

Ninety-eight per cent of the total area of the isle had passed into American ownership before the death of President McKinley. The "natives" were Spanish, not Cuban. When Spain was defeated, these Spanish people had but one desire, namely, to sell out their lands and go back to Spain. Thus, the real estate holdings were in very large tracts of land, from 10,000 to 50,000 acres, no surveys, all natural boundaries, undivided family interests running back two and three generations holding title.

Americans were quick to organize companies to buy these tracts, prompted first by their own desire to live and bring on developments on the isle, but not a professional "landman" or promoter has ever operated on the isle.

In a few years various companies had sold in small tracts lands to more than 10,000 men and women in almost every State in the Union. The American Consul on the Isle of Pines, on February 1, 1923, in response to a request from then Secretary of State Hughes as to the value of holdings of American property owners on the Isle of Pines, estimated said investments at over $21,000,000. These interests today would not bring 10 cents on the dollar—I doubt if they would bring five!

Five thousand Americans were living happily on the Isle of Pines at that time. I doubt exceedingly if there are 250 there now—and they would leave if they could.

While taxes are moderate, so much red tape is involved—all in the Spanish language and a complicated legal form to get out tax bills—that payment is difficult. Property values have so terribly depreciated that practically most of these 10,000 men and women who invested their all in the Isle of Pines, believing it was American territory, have abandoned their homes and properties and will take a 100 per cent loss.

The history, when it is written, of the United States' Government treatment of these Americans, largely from New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Minnesota and the two Dakotas, who so enthusiastically engaged in the development of our "last frontier," if, and when written, is going to be a record that no one can be very proud of.

It is impossible for the American land owner to sell his holdings to Cubans. The average Cuban considers it beneath his dignity to grow anything but sugar cane or tobacco, and not a pound of either of these products is produced on the island. A Cuban also will engage in the cattle business, but the Isle of Pines is too limited in extent for this industry. The excessive duty on citrus fruits and winter vegetables (produced and shipped to New York at seasons of the year when they do not interfere in any manner with United States products) is absolutely prohibitive.

Our Government should do one of two things: first, loan or give Cuba two or three million dollars to buy out at a big sacrifice these individual American land owners; or, secondly, buy the Isle of Pines from Cuba for a few million dollars and use it as a coaling, submarine and naval base. Of course, the Island's most natural use would be as a sanitarium, as Brig. Gen. Frank McCoy once reported to Gen. Wood, "that Gold Almighty had made the isle just for that purpose as a sanitarium for our invalid soldiers." In a word—empty our northern military hospitals and send the invalids down to the Isle of Pines to get well.

Personally, I am not interested in what our Government does. I have been living down there for many years and have sort of "gone native." The Isle has given me 10 years of extra life (I am now 80 years of age) and expect the Isle to give me at least 10 years more. I own a nice little home down there with a few acres of land and have nothing for sale.

Movie Tricks Outdo Those Of Magicians

dropped from overhead give you a rain storm on the screen equal in reality to any of Nature—whirling sheets of rain and all. If you want something milder, just use a garden spray hose, but keep the hose out of range of the camera. If you don't want your actors to get wet, have the "rain" come down between them and the camera, and on the screen it will look as though the players are really getting soaked.

For falling snow, bleached corn or rice flakes are just the thing. Snow on the ground equals salt mixed up with gypsum. Get some shredded asbestos if you want snow on trees. And as for frost, merely smear crystal camphor on the window panes. Shape your icicles out of cellophane, then dip them into paraffin. They'll melt when they get under the Kleig lights—that is the paraffin will, and they'll look like real melting icicles. Really, it's all quite simple, yet the real thing would hardly show up any better.

Special stains, lacquers and the blow torch are used to give aged and antique effects to surfaces. Majestic marble is paper printed with marble-like designs and then pasted on wood.

Wires Manipulate Animals.

Toy train models crash head on to give you "real" train wrecks. Monstrous animals are frames covered with skins and manipulated by wires. Dangerous snakes are made of rubber and made to "work" with marked realism by piano wires.

Spun sugar, made like the sugar candy sold at circuses and fairs, gives excellent spider webs into which actors may stick their faces with impunity. A solution of rubber and glue forced through a fine orifice and blown about by a fan makes realistic cobwebs.

And then there is a printer in Hollywood who can duplicate the style of almost any newspaper in the world, as well as menu cards and stationery of almost any hotel, when they are needed by film producers.

However, all these trick devices for creating illusions take second place when compared with the importance of the "transparency shot," the double exposure and reverse printing. These are among filmdom's most powerful trick developments.

With the "transparency" shot any background in the world can be produced right on the set in the studio lot without the necessity of building up scenery or going thousands of miles away on location. Scenes from Monte Carlo, Hong Kong, or a mob at a football game, can easily be had as a background with this trick.

"Transparency Shots."

If you have been at the Washington Academy of Science Museum or other museum where some of the exhibits are projected on a ground glass screen by means of a camera in back of the glass, you are familiar with a miniature form of the main device used in making "transparency shots." It is an immense glass screen like this which is suspended instead of scenery behind the stage. Back of this screen is a motion-picture camera. This camera throws an image of the desired landscape on the screen—just like the camera in the museum. On the stage in front of this screen the actors perform and the cameramen take the pictures of the act. When the finished film is later shown, it is practically impossible to detect that the background is not the real thing.

Thus it is a simple matter for a Hollywood studio to have a street scene in Paris right on the set. It takes but a moment for the directors to go over to the studio library, where films of men, events, landscapes of lands and streets scenes of every city in the world are kept filed away. Here the director can easily select the Paris scene he wants and has it projected on the transparent screen for his background. The actor performing in front of the transparent screen may never have been in Paris. This trick saves studios millions of dollars every year, for it makes unnecessary the building of expensive scenery or the crossing of oceans to get local color. Paris, or any other city, for that matter, is only as far as the studio library when it comes to making movies.

Using the same trick, directors can make tigers and lions leap at our hero without the least danger to him. Our hero on the stage merely steps out of the way of the image of a leaping tiger projected on the transparent screen.

Mr. Churchill tells us that the leopard which sprang at Gene Raymond in the "Zoo in Budapest" was only the image of one projected on a transparent screen.

Double Role Explained.

Have you wondered how in the world an actor is shown in a double role, talking to himself and even sitting in his own lap? This is a simple trick when done with the transparency screen. First, the actor plays the part of one character, and this is filmed and the sound recorded. The film is then printed and projected on the transparent screen. In front of the screen the actor now plays the other part opposite his own image. Photographed, the illusion is perfect.

When M. G. M. wanted a herd of elephants for its elephant stampede in the picture "Tarzan" and had only a few elephants on hand, it multiplied the few into many, we are told, by the simple trick of taking photographs of the same elephants three times and combining these films into one film. Then, to give the impression of still greater numbers, the images of the elephants in the combined film were projected on the glass screen and the same original elephants performed in front of the screen. Perhaps you might have recognized in the picture the same elephant appearing at four different places in the same "shoot." By this method of double exposure a few elephants were made to give the effect of an honest-to-goodness stampede of a herd. Similarly a few people can be multiplied into a mob.

A trick that always brings a laugh is showing a group of divers plunging into the water, then jumping right back out again onto the diving board. This done by printing the film in reverse, with the result that the end of the event is shown first and the beginning last. The amusing illusion is thus created. By this same trick trains are made whole again after being smashed to bits in a wreck, objects go backward, animals which in reality are rising from the ground are made to appear to stagger to earth.

How Tarzan Killed Rhino.

It is by such a trick that Johnny Weissmuller "killed" the rhinoceros in the picture "Tarzan." On the set it happened this way. The rhino was made to get on her side. Tarzan stood astride her with a fake dagger having a blade which was in the handle when he pressed the dagger to the rhino's side. As the rhino got up on her feet Tarzan quickly lifted the dagger high into the air above his head and the blade sprung into place.

What you saw on the screen was not this at all. You saw Tarzan plunging the dagger into the mighty beast and the rhino staggering to the ground with a deadly wound. The clever trick of printing in reverse the film taken on the studio lot, reversed the whole action and gave the realistic killing effect.

Such are some of the tricks of Hollywood. While you may not be able to fool all the people all of the time, Hollywood can do it about 99 times out of a hundred.

Sawdust Chaplain Sees Ideal Flock In Circus People

Kansas City, June 2 (AP).—Most evangelists stress the sawdust trail. The sawdust ring is "Doc" Waddell's church.

Waddell, "the circus chaplain," once asked a preacher for permission to preach from his pulpit. The preacher was reluctant. To him Waddell said:

"I'll take my congregation of circus people and put them up against your congregation, and mine will skin them a mile for every-day goodness and human sympathy and love for each other. I don't have a pulpit to preach from. My pulpit often is the tongue of a circus wagon or a trunk in the dressing tent or the curbing of the circus ring, and the roof of the temple in which I preach is canvas; but, Mister, I've got the finest congregation on earth. I wouldn't trade it for yours."

Huge Losses Are Result Of Poor Sight

Annual Casualties Are Above Those of U. S. in World War.

Unknown to the subject the apparatus recorded much more than his pressing the button at the end of each page. It marked down and measured every little twitch and every slight pressure on the button.

Remarkable records that were made showed how under dimmed light the subject increased his nervous and muscular tension. It took very little dimming to increase this in a marked degree.

The records showed how the dimming of the lights made the subject fatigue more quickly.

Tests were made in a noisy room. Scientists well know how noise saps a worker's energy. But the tests showed that his nervous tension was much less easily increased by noise in a brightly lighted room than in a room where the lights were dim.

In studying the science of seeing the Nela Park research men demonstrated how it entered into the day's work. At the end of the day the subject of the experiment was found much more attentive than at the start. In fact, on an average with many subjects, attentiveness increased 14 per cent during the day. Delay in correcting errors in the work was increased 2 per cent. The rate of competing tasks was stepped up as much as 4 per cent.

But what happened to the eyes? Visual acuity dropped 2 per cent. Eye muscle balance got off 5 per cent.

Measurement of eye reactions to objects in visual contrast has also been an important part of the study.

When the contrast is greatest the smallest object that can be seen is one which is three-thousandths of an inch in diameter, placed 14 inches away. A black object in a very dark gray background—the minimum of contrast—must be 30 times that large in order to be seen, the researchers found.

Possibly many of the more important phases of the experimentation in the lighting research laboratory at Nela Park are yet to come. The science of seeing, despite the thousands of experiments performed, is still very young. Dr. Luckiesh points out there is a lot we do not know about the relation between the functioning of our eyes and the functioning of the rest of our bodies.

How does light of different degrees of intensity affect, for instance, the action of the heart? Is poor, unnatural lighting detrimental to this organ?

Not all the work of the laboratroy has been performed to provide data for somebody else to use in writing prescriptions for better environment for the eyes.

Dr. Luckiesh and Dr. Frank Moss, his assistant, have worked out a scale of lighting intensities for different purposes. For sewing on light material or normal reading, 20 foot-candles are needed. (A foot-candle is the amount of light from a candle placed away from the object under observation, and 20 foot-candles is the amount from a 40-watt incandescent tungsten lamp two feet away.) For prolonged reading of fine print and for tasks that involve close and intricate operations, 50 foot-candles are necessary. These light prescriptions assume that glare is eliminated and that the light is diffused.

THIS is the story of a pair of new shoes.

Because one of the shoes had a faulty seam, it is a sad story.

And because the shoes were bought in a campaign year, it is an unfinished story that might have a sadder ending.

The shoes were purchased a few weeks ago by Representative Fletcher B. Swank, of Oklahoma, who has been coming to Congress off and on since the Sixty-seventh Congress.

There was no particular reason for his buying the shoes, except he needed a pair. Election year or no election year, he had been buying shoes ever since his early youth in the Beef Creek Indian district, where it wasn't always necessary to wear them.

But this particular shoe had a faulty seam. Busy Judge Swank didn't have time to change it. It rubbed a painful blister on his foot. Still the Oklahoman continued about his Congressional chores.

Came a day the infection spread, and Judge Swank was forced to take to bed. The infection became serious. Physicians, really concerned, were hard put to it. At one time, they feared the Judge might lose his foot.

At last he responded to treatment. About a month has gone by now, and the judge is beginning to look his normal self.

But is there a sympathetic response from his Oklahoma country district. Not so you could notice it. The Judge is being widely panned out there for splurging in a new pair of shoes. They think he's been trying to put on the dog (positively not meant for a pun). And it might cost him his re-election.

An unpaid hospital bill is being used against another veteran member of Congress from a Southern State in his race for reelection. A Washington institution filed suit against the member (who has been ill for two years or more), in the member's home district. An opposition candidate took political advantage of the fact his opponent entered the hospital under another name.

THE signal of distress, an inverted American flag, waved frantically from the staff atop the Capitol Building one day last week.

Below, in House and Senate chambers, there was no more than the usual need for help.

The House was loudly debating the conference report on the airmail bill, and not more than ordinarily distressed.

The Senate was in throes of tariff debate, and didn't want to be saved.

A lone Capitol policeman from the plaza spied the S O S signal, and reported quickly to headquarters. An investigation was instituted. Quickly the flag came hurtling down, then went back again, right side up.

Somebody's mistake.

Last session, the flag over the House Office Building hung at half mast for a few minutes. Curious members made inquiries. They found the wife of a member had died. Acting on garbled reports that a member had passed away, building officials had ordered the customary mark of respect. Another mistake.

SENATOR TOM CONNALLY, of Texas, takes a vast amount of pride in those long, graying black, glistening locks and his Senatorial haircut.

They are a political asset back in Texas. If Representative Joe Bailey, who is running against him for re-election, hasn't learned it yet, there may be some enlightening revelations in store.

The Senate barber shop holds the secret of those glossy locks, and what keeps them glossy. It is a quantity of hair tonic, of the Senator's own especial mixture, kept always at hand on the barber shop shelf.

We are told the Senator sends all the way to St. Louis for it.

Senator Connally, in his race for relection, is conducting a shrewd campaign of non-recognition.

The Senator has never mentioned his opponent, Joe Bailey. If Connally has opposition, you would never learn if from his own utterances, although young Bailey has never hesitated to pitch orally into his distinguished opponent.

Newspapermen have futilely tried to prod Senator Connally into passing comment that might make good reading. They have been notoriously unsuccessful. The other day, Representative Bailey was forced down in an airplane on his return flight to Washington.

Here was a chance for the famous touch of Connally humor. A reporter called him.

The Senator had nothing to say.

MASSACHUSETTS' William Connery, chairman of the House Labor Committee, is famous for his repertoire of stories.

Whenever you see a group of members in a huddle, with Connery at the core, it's a safe bet he's spinning one of the yarns he picked up during ten years on the stage.

Nick Longworth was one of his most appreciative listeners.

One day the former Speaker was presiding over the House. The debate was dull. Speaker Longworth called Connery to the rostrum to relieve his tedium.

"What is that story you were telling——?"

Connery told it with gusto. Amused, Longworth forgot where he was, laughed out loud.

Immediately he regained his poise, seized his gavel, pounded it.

"The House will come to order," he shouted.

Labor Issues 'War' Warning To U.S. Leaders

Next Two Weeks May Be Most Eventful in Its History.

however, at every step by industrialists who have taken pride in their unbroken rejection of unionism. Years after the Homestead strike, Charles M. Schwab, successor to Frick as head of the Carnegie Co. and the more recent Bethelehem Steel Corporation, boasted that "since that day I have never had labor unions in any of my concerns" and that "we make our own labor unions," but "we never allow dictation" and "I will not permit myself to be in the position of having labor dictate to the management."

The company union referred to by Schwab existed as a form of employe representation council in the Bethlehem plants many years before anyone dreamed of NRA. This employe representation plan, however, was copied by the Weirton Co. after the NRA became effective, it was recited in the court proceedings last week. United States Steel likewise fought the Amalgamated, holding what the latter's spokesmen call "shotgun elections" in order to bar the outside union.

New Members Seek Action.

In the years after the Homestead strike the leadership in the Amalgamated became conservative and mild until the infiltration of new members during the last year. This new membership—"the rank and file"—wanted action and took control of the organization at a convention several weeks ago.

The Amalgamated convention by an overwhelming majority committed the organization to an immediate drive for union recognition and warned the industry that unless the demand was accepted by June 10, a strike would be called six days later. Distrustful of their own officers the "rank and file" named a committee to sit with the former in all negotiations between employers or the Government.

The gauntlet thrown down by the Amalgamated was quickly picked up by the Iron and Steel Institute, organization of the steel manufacturers. In a meeting of the institute a few days after the union convention, Eugene G. Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel, speaking for the industry, said the latter, would "maintain the open shop" and regarded its employe representation plans as practical and embodying "a mutuality of interests" while barring outsiders and foreign organizations from dictating to the workers and management.

T. M. Gudler, chairman of the Republic Steel Corporation; sharply denounced "professional unions and labor leaders" at the meeting, which apparently was in harmony with its speakers.

Strike Threat Repeated.

As a result of the attitude of the steel manufacturers, regarded as autocratic in some quarters here, the Amalgamated spokesmen repeated their threat of a Nation-wide steel strike and were summoned here by the National Labor Board.

The "rank and file" committee accompanied Mike Tighe, president of the Amalgamated, to Washington last week for conferences with NRA officials and Senator Wagner. It was Earl J. Forbeck, chairman of the "rank and file" committee, who called Administrator Johnson "a bag of wind" and his committee signed a statement terming "a lot of bunk" the President's assertion in renewing the steel code that he would take steps to see that elections were held.

Although short, stocky, red-faced Mike Tigue, the union's conservitive president, expressed great embarassment over the sharp, unadorned language of his colleagues and sought to tone down their utterances, official Washington took them seriously and is concerned over their apparent determination to force a show-down between the union and the steel barons.

Leaving the city Thursday to return on Monday to request President Roosevelt to call the leaders of the steel industry to a White House conference, the "rank and file" committee issued a statement saying the present situation resulted from "the overwhelming sentiment of 40 years of steel domination that is leading to bloody warfare."

"We told the National Labor Board," their statement said, "how the steel companies were preparing with machine guns, tear gas, steam pipes and armed deputies"—a sentence reminiscent, if true, of the forces which met the Amalgamated strikers in 1892.

"The Robber Barons."

There is much about the present steel situation reminscent of previous labor warfare. For instance the "rank and file" committee on leaving Johnson's office last week asked: "Is the American Iron and Steel Institute more powerful than the President of the United States?"

Matthew Josephson in his recent book "The Robber Barons" recalls that in the Administration of the first Roosevelt, small business men in a coal community afflicted by a six months' strike petitioned in the White House for its intercession and asked: "Is J. Pierpont Morgan greater than the people? Is he mightier than the Government?"

The speech made by Girdler before the Iron and Steel Institute some days ago when he said that "I have a little farm and a few apple trees and before I would deal with William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, or any professional labor leader I would shut down my plant and retire to my farm," was not very different from similiar speeches many years ago.

Josephson in his "Robber Barons" recalls that in 1850 a Col. Borden, a cotton-maker of Fall River, whose employes struck against a 13-hour day, told them:

"I saw that mill built stone by stone; I saw the pickers, the carding engines, the spinning mules and the looms put into it, one after the other, and I would see every machine and stone crumble to the floor and fall again before I would accede to your wishes."

Threats Taken Seriously.

Although it is true the steel industry has never been coerced by any strike, has never bowed its head to organized labor and while there may be some truth in contentions that the Amalgamated is now bluffing and cannot carry out an effective strike, their threats are taken seriously in Administration circles.

There are some who believe that unless the Government forces the steel industry to consent to elections by the workers to designate representatives and then recognizes the Amalgamated if and where it is the choice of the workers, all industry will ignore the collective bargaining provisions of the NRA act. And there is some reason to believe that President Roosevelt is inclined to that view.

The next two weeks may become one of the most eventful in the history of the organized labor movement.

Research Helped By Quintuplets

which filters incoming air and maintains a constant temperature. Most important is the temperature factor, as premature babies do not have the brain center which regulates body temperature fully developed.

Medical historians say that the birth of quintuplets is so rare that only 30 cases have been recorded in the past 500 years. Of these, according to Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, none of the 150 children have lived more than 50 minutes.

Already the Canadian quintet, born Monday, have broken all survival records. Records of the association show that quadruplets occur only once in 512,000 births. Quintuplets occurrence has not been calculated. Dr. Fishbein went on to say that twins happen every 80 births, and triplets every 6,400 births. Only one case of quadruplets in which all four lived has been recorded, he said.

If the Dionne family resided in Germany or Italy where large families are rewarded by the state, the parents would undoubtedly receive a handsome bounty.

But it seems that only in America would the reward be a fortune. The parents have accepted a huge sum to exhibit the girls at the World's Fair in Chicago.

At first it was reported that the parents had been offered $50,000 for this. Later it was announced that they had refused the offer. But Friday, the fact that they had signed a contract to exhibit the youngsters, was confirmed.

The five will go to Chicago as soon as they are ready to travel. The family will get $250 a week including expenses and 30 per cent of all receipts, according to the Associated Press.

Expert Tells How Farmers Reap Success

Home-Building Rather Than Money-Making Urged as Goal.

prices and better gains than they get. When a man gets a small loan or finances himself, he cultivates his own judgment and relies more on himself. This is the best method to follow in learning to farm."

Since 1914 Mr. Anderson has purchased five farms and paid cash for all of them. The last farm was bought two years ago. He feeds hundreds of cattle every year, and he has never given a mortgage on cattle or land. Mr. Anderson finances many farmers. If he finds it difficult for them to meet their obligations, he buys live stock for them, then watches them handle and feed it—really sees that they make money.

Every rule of successful farming has been demonstrated over and over again by farmers. They are the life blood of agriculture. Ed. Schwegler, of Plymouth County, Iowa, declares: "It is necessary to follow early training to make the best success." He was born on a dairy farm in Switzerland, and came to America as a young man. He worked on dairy farms until he saved enough money to buy his first dairy herd. Last year, after five years in the dairy business for himself, he had one of the best producing herds in Northwestern Iowa. While some of his neighbors were striking during the past year, he was at home milking profit-producing cows.

Increases Corn Yield.

It is possible to find thousands of farmers all over this country, who have been making adjustments for a period of years and leading the way now, but I am referring to men fairly close to home. "Have a special interest in some phase of farming," Charles J. Johnson, of Woodbury County, Iowa, told me on a recent visit. Mr. Johnson has improved his corn over a period of 20 years, so it matures 15 days earlier and yields 15 bushels more per acre.

Farmers who are getting along well have improved their live stock. O. W. Jones, of Monona County, Iowa, began raising Hampshire hogs before the World War. Today, while some have gone out of the pure bred hog business because high prices ruined them, Mr. Jones says, "my herd is greatly improved. I am saving 110 brood sows this spring. Although I shall sell about one-half of these to farmers and breeders, I do not expect much better than the market prices. I am going ahead improving my herd to meet the market demands, and when prices get better I shall be able to supply the trade." Without such substantial farmers, who keep level heads in prosperous as well as lean years, agriculture will retrograde.

"The best method to learn a business is while growing into it." C. H. Morris, of Carroll, Nebr., declares: "I bought my first pure bred Oxford Down ewe in 1906 for $35. Since that time I have bought only eight or ten ewes, but I have always purchased the best breeding rams I gould get." Today, Mr. Morris has one of the very best small pure bred flocks of sheep in the Middle West.

He has never been able to meet the demand for breeding ewes until the last two years. This is giving him an opportunity to increase his flock from 80 to 110 head. By such a method Mr. Morris is increasing his flock when prices have been rather low, which is more practical than doing it when prices are high. He will be ready to meet the demand for this kind of sheep when the market improves, but he is not trying to sell now to depress the prices.

"Dry years and the depression caused me to learn a more profitable method of fattening cattle," declares C. W. Willey, of Coleridge, Nebr., who started farming since the World War. "For three years I have marketed March and April calves the last part of November of the same year in Sioux City, where I topped the market. I was short of grain, and so I started my calves eating grain when two weeks old. I kept them on a full feed all summer, and I found they could be finished with less grain and cheaper grains than when held an extra year." The results of Mr. Willey's method of fattening cattle may revolutionize the feeding practices on many farms of the corn belt.

College training for the farm is often belittled, but D. W. Beaty, a postgraduate student of agricultural economics from the famous Ames School, where Dr. A. G. Black, the National corn-hog man, headed the department, is now making money on a South Dakota farm. He says: "My college training is valuable to me. I have made my own start in farming, and during the past six years I have made farming my hobby. My rent was raised from $6 to $8 per acre last year, and I expect to continue profitable farming."

Our greatest hope for the future depends upon the best boys and girls staying by the farm. They can do in farming what they have done in every line. For 20 years boys and girls have been pulled away from the land. However, new encouragement is being given them, and over a million boys and girls are in 4-H Club work and vocational agriculture, getting a training and an inspiration never before experienced by the farm youth.

Life Blood Drained.

The principal objective of agriculture needs to be centered around country living. With good roads and modern conveniences on the farm, there is the opportunity for full social living. If society of the farm can be placed on a par with that of the city, then the farm will thrive as our great cities have.

Retired farmers have unconsciously drained the life blood from agriculture. Too much of the profit of farming has gone into the building of great cities and other communities. It estimated that 300,000 Iowa farmers have gone to California, and who has ever counted the many thousands and thousands of farm families that have moved to the towns and cities of the great agricultural State of Iowa?

City folk in business and professions have purchased a great amount of land for speculation, and this has created a large moving class of renters. The aching tooth will get well when we cure the cause. To cure the agricultural ills we must get a new objective—"Country Living."

A Garden of Eden.

Near Midland, S. Dak., on the driest spot in the dry section of the State, is a farm that blossoms like a Garden of Eden. D. W. Caney and family homesteaded this farm more than 25 years ago. Mr. Caney had been a plumber at Osceola, Iowa, and went West for his health. Today there is a beautiful 12-acre farmstead on this section of land, at an elevation of 2,040 feet above sea level, and where the rainfall averages 15 inches annually. The Caneys are raising a wonderful variety of flowers, shrubs, trees and fruits. On a single day as many as 2,000 people have come to see this beautiful farmstead and to picnic with the Caneys.

Mr. and Mrs. Caney have capturned the objective that will save America. Make the goal of agriculture the building of farm homes rather than the making of money, and the new deal will ripen into a well-balanced living.

The new agriculture will come into full fruition when the farm youth of this country catch the real spirit of making farm life the great objective. The best farm boys and girls have it in their power to direct the new way by striking out fearlessly toward this goal. They must make country living the ideal life. That is the hope of tomorrow.

British and Dutch Rubber Pact Will Not Worry Trade

New York, June 2 (AP).—Excessively high retail prices on rubber products are not expected in trade circles here to result from the five-year British-Dutch production restriction agreement.

The agreement, which becomes effective July 1, will be administered by an international commission believed to control 90 per cent of the world's rubber production.

There will be no price fixing agreement, it is said, but production quotas will be allocated, an indirect method for managing price through supply restrictions.

The Sevenson control act in effect from 1922 to 1928 was a British effort which shot prices to dizzy heights, but that such a result is not expected by rubber manufacturers in the United States is shown by the relative indifference they have displayed so far.

Sze Assails "Aggression" Of Japanese

Chinese Minister Challenges Contention That Peace Is Aim.

elementary principles of right and justice.

"Japan has taken frequent occasion to refer to political conditions in China. She has, however, taken care not to refer to the situation in her own country, where express legal provision has been made for the freedom of her military forces from control by the civil authorities. In every other constitutionally organized country of the world it has been deemed to be of primary and indispensable importance that the military forces should be subordinate to the civil authorities.

"Thus again, Japan furnishes to the world a unique, but not an admirable, example. One thing is certain, and that is, that despite her assurances, Japan does not want China to become a prosperous and politically unified country, and, if we may judge by what has repeatedly happened in the past, she will do what she can to prevent this from being realized.

"As regards Japan's opium policy in Manchuria, I quote from the well informed correspondent of the London Times, printed in that newspaper April 24 last:

" 'The fifth annual report for 1933 on the illicit drug traffic by Russell Pasha, the chief of the Cairene police and director of the Central Narcotic Intelligence Bureau, which has just been published, gives, as usual, a valuable survey of the progress of the international fight against the drug danger. It shows that in Europe illegal manufacture of drugs has been almost stamped out, and that the traffic has largely been brought under control.

" 'A fresh danger, however, is growing up in the Far East, where, under the present regime in Manchuria, a new field of drug traffic is being opened up which may, in due course, menace the whole world. What appears to be a government opium monopoly,' the report says, 'is functioning in Manchuria, and this encourages the growth of the local product and the import of Persian opium.

" 'The probable consequences of such development, if not checked, are only too clear.' This makes it plain as to what nation is now the leader in the development of the narcotic traffic throughout the world," said Minister Sze.

Regarding the statement by Ambassador Saito, as reported in the interview in the Washington Post, that there is "entire freedom of the press" in Japan, Dr. Sze said:

"What can one say of freedom of speech in Japan when we see a professor of law in the Kyoto Imperial University of Japan dismissed from his position simply for expressing the universally accepted view of criminologists that crime originates from defects in society, and that crime will not diminish until the existing social structure is changed; that crime, like poverty, disease, unemployment and prostitution, is the result of defects in society. (See Contemporary Japan, September, 1933, p. 327, a journal published by Japanese in Tokyo.)

"Mr. Saito says that there is little crime in Japan and that crime is dealt with 'promptly and severely.' Were the assassins of May 15, 1932, so dealt with? Were those who murdered hundreds of Koreans and Chinese in 1923 so dealt with? Were those who murdered Chinese in Korea in 1931 so dealt with?

"The United States represents the working out of the problem of popular government upon the largest scale known to history, and has had a longer experience than any other now existing popular government. The United States is the chief example of the state operating under a written constitution—'a government of laws and not of men.'

"For these reasons it was but natural that China, when seeking to establish a government founded upon the will of the people, should turn to the United States for inspiration. To such an extent has the United States influenced educational reform in China, that this was the point most strongly emphasized by the commission of the League of Nations which visited China in order to study her educational system and to suggest improvements.

"The Christian missionaries from the United States have had greater influence in China than those from other countries. There is a greater number of students in the colleges and universities in the United States from China than from any other Western country."

Dr. Sze has been alternately the Chinese Minister to the Court of St. James and to the United States since 1914. He was educated at St. John's University, Shanghai, China, but received his A. B. and master's degrees at Cornell University at Ithaca, N. Y. He has honorary degrees from several leading universities in this country and abroad. He received his college preparatory course at Central High School in Washington. In answer to a question as to his religion, Dr. Sze said that he is a Buddhist.

'OGPU' Keeps Watch on U. S. Job Holders

Vast Secret Police Force Is on Lookout for Crooks, Grafters.

1,000 men. He said such an expansion was necessary to create a vast Federal drag-net for criminals.

Agents of both the Secret Service and the Bureau of Investigation are reliably reported to have guarded the children of several prominent Washington officials for months as an aftermath of kidnaping threats. Among those who have received such protection for their sons and daughters is Joseph Keenan, square-jawed Irishman who has prosecuted "Machine Gun" Kelly and other notorious child-snatchers since he became Assistant Attorney General.

The publicity-shy postal inspectors are more feared by criminals than are most Federal investigators. Maybe that is because they have been in the crime-detection business since the pony-express days. They investigate robberies and illegal use of the mails.

All the candidates for the thousands of postmasterships are passed on by the inspectors. A postal official the other day unfolded a tale about the difficulties encountered by his men in weeding out aspirants in a large Southern city.

Boasted of Family.

"It reminded me," he related, "of the proud New Englander who wrote a long-winded letter to a Westerner applying for a job as a school teacher. The applicant bragged for ten pages about his family history and didn't say anything about his other qualifications.

"The Westerner replied: 'There must be some mistake. We want a man for school-teaching purposes, not eugenic purposes.' "

One of the newer agencies was set up a few months ago by Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator. His aids keep a sharp lookout for petty chiseling in disbursement of relief funds.

Hopkins' ace investigator is Lorena Hickok, former Associated Press reporter and confidante of Mrs. Roosevelt. Miss Hickok has converted her nose for news into a nose for graft.

Al Capone, erstwhile Chicago alcohol baron, was sent to the Atlanta penitentiary by alert Internal Revenue Bureau agents. Several Washington gamblers have run afoul of the revenue men for doctoring their tax returns.

Protest Wire Tapping.

Persons jailed by the Federal agencies, right or wrong, have protested that their telephone wires were tapped, their telegrams steamed open and mail intercepted. Congressional critics have on occasion accused Government detectives of breaking into their offices at night and tampering with their files.

Capitol Hill has many investigators of its own. Two of the best known are Ferdinand Pecora, who unearthed Wall Street secrets for the Senate banking committee, and John Holland, who threw a New Orleans courtroom into an uproar by a daring verbal clash with voluble Senator Huey Long during a Senate committee investigation into the election of Senator John Overton.

Federal agents are called on sometimes to save the reputations of Government officials involved in disastrous affairs of the heart. We don't vouch for it, but it is said a former conspicuous office-holder suffered from insomnia for several weeks hand-running while agents sought to recover a photograph on which he had inscribed a rash missive in a weak moment.

Bright Idea Adopted.

The operatives, disguised as retired bankers, wooed the damsel at her fashionable Washington hotel. They knew the coveted picture reposed on a grand piano in her apartment. She was too smart to invite them in. Passkeys wouldn't work.

Then along came Christmas. Someone had a bright idea. New agents were assigned to the case and they wore overalls instead of white ties. Four men rapped on the door of the woman's quarters and were permitted to enter with their gift from an unidentified admirer. It was a Christmas tree.

The purposefully clumsy "draymen" arranged the tree with great care. There was method in their madness, for when they departed the incriminating souvenir was on its way to the incinerator and the deft-fingered Santa Claus marched back to his office to receive a promotion.

All Federal undercover men have access to the elaborate Bureau of Standards crime detection laboratory. Scientists can all but tell a man's life history by examining strands of his hair, his footprints, fingerprints, laundry marks and handwriting. Lieut. John Fowler of the Washington police force and Dr. Wilmer Souder of the Bureau of Standards, both noted firearms experts, are available to decipher the mute messages left in revolver barrels.

Merger Plan Assailed.

Suggestions have been brought forward for merger of all Federal investigative agencies in the Department of Justice. Critics have assailed the proposal as opening the door to political abuses.

Perhaps opponents fear that a central secret police force might eventually be utilized for political persecution as in Russia, where the "Gaypayoo" have been charged with spiriting away foes of the regime in the middle of the night.

Some of the Russian victims have disappeared. Many are believed to have been exiled to dreary Siberia. Others are said to have been whacked over their heads with mallets from behind. The "Gaypayoo" are credited with another novel method of execution, "painless" surprise shooting in the neck from the shadows.

From all reports, however, some victims of the American OGPU would just as soon be decapitated as to be "tailed" any longer.

Forest-Clad Peaks Are Unique; Large Section Now U. S. Park

200,000 Acres of Playground Is Virgin Forest; Many Lakes and Mountain Streams Supply Ideal Trout and Bass Fishing.

"He crossed the ranges that continue northward to the Great Smokies and spent the summer in the beautiful hill country where the springs of the western waters flowed from the ground. He had never seen so lovely a land. The high valleys, through which the currents ran, were hemmed in by towering mountain walls, with cloud-capped peaks. The fertile loam forming the bottoms was densely covered with the growth of the primeval forest, broken here and there by glade-like openings, where herds of game grazed on the tall thick grass."

In all its unspoiled, natural beauty, this picture of "The Land of the Sky," taken from Roosevelt's "Winning of the West," is as true a description today as it was in 1770 when first gazed upon by James Robertson, one of its earliest settlers.

It lies under the canopy of a pale blue sky with a stock of nature's treasures piled high and overlapped in delirious yet delightful confusion with endless miles of green, velvety forests unrolling to the infinite. Valleys are in nooks and corners. Gems of sapphire and jade lakes are carelessly scattered among its folds. Threads of silver rivers wind through its depressions. Tremendous fields of rhododendrons, like immense colored scarfs, are strewn about. The fragrance of pines, tulips and maples fills the air. This is one of America's wonderlands!

"Land of the Sky."

"The Land of the Sky" lies in a mountainous rectangle which includes eastern Tennessee, western North Carolina and north Georgia, with the noblest ranges of the Appalachians lifting their lofty summits skyward; for the Blue Ridge, Unaka and Great Smokies include the highest group of mountains in the eastern half of our country. Some of its clustered peaks, like Mount Mitchell, Clingman Dome, Mount Guyout, Mount LeConte, Mount Calkins, and Jones Knob, are all higher than Mount Washington in New Hampshire, while more than a score of other mountains that raise their green forest-clad slopes well over 6,000 feet have never been named. Some of the highest and most densely timbered mountains of this whole region have been set aside as Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The Great Smoky Mountains, the most massive mountain uplift in the East, run the entire length of the park. The following is quoted from the writings of the late Horace Kephart: "Nearly always there hovers over the high tops and around them, a tenuous mist, a dreamy blue haze, like that of Indian summer, or deeper. Often it grows so dense as almost to shut out the distant view, as smoke does that has spread from a far-off forest fire. Then it is a 'great smoke' that covers all the outlying world; the rim of the earth is but a few miles away; beyond is mystery, enchantment."

"Mysterious, indeed, this Smoky Mountain region has been ever since the first white explorer, De Soto, heard of it, nearly four centuries ago. At intervals of many years a few adventurous botanists and geologists have roamed through its great forest—Bartram, Michaux, Gray, Buckley, Mitchell, Guyot, and others—but their reports reached none but scientific circles. The wildest and most picturesque highland east of the Rockies remained virtually unknown until about ten years ago. Even today there are gulfs in the Smokies that no man is known to have penetrated."

Park 71 Miles Long.

The axis of the park runs nearly east and west. The greatest length is 71 miles and the greatest breadth is 19 miles. More than 200,000 acres of the park is virgin forest. This includes the largest and finest virgin hardwood forest in the United States, also the largest virgin forest of red spruce. Much of the remainder is a very fine forest of second growth which within a few years will closely approximate virgin forest conditions. Nowhere in the world is there such a variety of plant life in an equal area. There are 152 varieties of trees alone.

The highest mountains are covered with unusually dense forests consisting of spruce, balsam, and some hemlock. Wind falls and dense brush make them difficult to penetrate. Mountains of intermediate height are covered with hardwood growths, in which beech predominates. These beech forests are open with a clean forest floor and they somewhat resemble a well-kept country estate. Still another contrast is formed by mountain tops that are covered only with grass. These are called locally "balds." So far scientists have been unable to explain them. They offer unobstructed views in all directions and are one of the finest attractions of the park.

The mountain streams are bordered with rhododendrons and laurel and the mountain slopes are thick with flame azalea and wild honeysuckle beneath the dense stand of trees. The bold mountain summits and knife-like ridges have a dense covering of rhododendrons and sand myrtle which make them appear from a distance less rugged and precipitous.

Qualla Indian Reservation.

Visitors to the park will be interested in the Cherokee Indians on the Qualla Indian Reservation, which is immediately south of the park. Although the Government has instituted here a comprehensive system of education and modern methods of living, ancient ceremonies and sports are still preserved as racial customs.

The Indians still play the Cherokee game of ball—a sport far too strenuous for members of the Caucasian race. There are many experts in archery and blow gun. In 1838 an attempt was made to round up the Cherokees and remove them to Oklahoma. A considerable band escaped to the fastnesses of the Great Smoky Mountains and could not be found. The Cherokees on the Qualla Reservation are descendants of those who hid in the mountains.

Ideal Trout Streams.

There are 600 miles of ideal trout streams in the park. Easily accessible waters have been fished so much, with so little restocking, that good sport is not assured in them. The inaccessible waters provide good fishing, almost without exception. Persons desiring to fish must secure a fishing license as required by the laws of North Carolina and Tennessee. The nonresident license in North Carolina is $5.10, and in Tennessee, $2.50. Persons who fish in both the North Carolina and Tennessee sections of the park must secure a license in each State.

Fishing with nets, seines, traps, or by the use of drugs or explosives or in any other way than with rod, hook, and line held in hand, or for merchandise or profit, is prohibited. Fishing in the park will be permitted only during the open season as prescribed for the adjoining counties by the States of North Carolina and Tennessee. Bass less than 8 inches, rainbow trout less than 7 inches, and brook trout less than 6 inches in length shall be carefully handled with moist hands and returned to the water at once. Fish retained shall be killed immediately upon being removed from the hook.

Ten bass per person and 20 trout per person fishing shall constitute the limit for a day's catch. In the discretion of the superintendent the limit for a day's catch may be increased or decreased in certain waters, indicated by posted notices.

It is impossible to portray by picture, brush or word the magnificent beauty that the Great Smokies present in one sweeping glance. Crest upon crest of mountains roll away to the infinite like the billows of a tremendous ocean turned to stone. Valleys and coves lie in purple mists. Shadows of clouds lazily drift along as if playing tag with the green top peaks. It is a land of heights and depths and the wildest and most thickly forested mountains in America. They are the only high mountains in America completely covered with forest. This glorious country, beautiful and peaceful, is the newest playground of the Nation.

Cruise to Circle Continent.

A cruise around the continent of South America, using one ship for the complete journey, including four days for the Eucharistic Congress at Buenos Aires, is announced by Thomas Cook & Son-Wagons-Lits, Inc. The cruise will be on the S. S. Malolo, sailing from San Francisco September 16, and will return to the same port on Armistice Day, November 11. The trip will last for 56 days, and will include 13 ports in nine countries.

A Waterfall in "The Land of the Sky"

"Looking Glass" Falls in Pisgah National Forest, which lies to the north of the Great Smokies.

Sharp Increase Seen For Domestic Travel

Domestic travel during the coming season should reach a higher point than at any time since 1930, according to John Murray Gibbon, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Gibbon, for years a leading Canadian advertising figure and authority on travel, forecast substantial travel increases in the United States as well as in Canada.

Mr. Gibbon said that advertising had been almost solely responsible for Canada's success as a tourist paradise. In addition to the efforts of the railroads and steamship lines to encourage travel, he said, the provinces of the Dominion had consistently advertised to bring tourists within their borders. The Canadian government is now considering a plan to coordinate tourist advertising activities to care for this prospective increase in travel.

Germany Offers Variety Of Sports to Visitors

Growing interest in sport in Germany has greatly increased that country's sport facilities, according to a pamphlet just published by the German Tourist Information Office, New York, entitled "Driving Your Own Car in Germany."

Fifty large golf courses, 1,000 tennis clubs, swimming pools in almost every village and hamlet, mountain climbing of the most interesting variety, hundreds of miles of well-kept wooded paths for hiking, thousands of lakes and streams for boating and fishing, in winter skiing and skating—all these facilities and many more are at the disposal of the visiting motorist and sportsman.

No Gold Hoarding.

Diamonds, gold and oil abound in the Caucasus Mountains. The people seem to care but little for the diamonds or gold, being agriculturists, and it is still too costly to get the oil out of the country.

Cuba's Future As Free Nation Is Uncertain

Island, Given Full Liberty, Faces Big Problem in Economics.

watching is carefully masked; it is only rarely that white Cubans reveal the intentness of their interest in the racial struggle.

Nevertheless the problem is there and it renders smooth functioning democratic government extremely difficult.

One reason of course for the slow growth of democratic skill is the waning faith in the democratic method. Cubans are aware of the decline of democracy in the world and aware, too, that this decline is frequently due to the ineffectiveness of popular government in coping with economic and social problems. Many see that the universal franchise is only applicable to fairly uniform populations enjoying a relatively high standard of living.

More Violence Feared

A new solution must be found and the search involves considerable blind groping. It may also involve more violence and turmoil.

Right now things are fairly quiet in Cuba. There has been a renewed outburst of direct-action terrorism in Havana and there have been rumors of large scale anti-American plots about to break. The broad base necessary if such tactics are to succeed has, however, been lacking.

The sugar grinding season, not a bad one as recent grinding seasons have gone, is over and the proceeds are not yet exhausted. People have money in their pockets. Not much, but enough to insure meals and a little diversion for a time. The $4,000,000 silver loan recently negotiated in Washington is busy putting some 10,000,000 silver pesos (worth a dollar each) into circulation. A lot of it is going to pay back salaries of federal employes; more is intended for employment-making public works.

The mercurial Latin-American temperament responds to these things with alacrity.

Mendieta Losing Popularity

Yet Provisional President Mendieta has lost popularity rapidly, and the date of the promised election of a President has had to be postponed again, this time until next December. There is no Congress.

When Grau San Martin went out and Carlos Mendieta took his place last January, the country went wild with rejoicing. Mendieta was the man all factions would trust and admire. Grau had represented but one group—the militant students. Mendieta promptly acquired the blessings of American recognition, a thing Grau never even caught sight of.

But Grau had issued a number of important decrees improving the lot of labor. He had played up the popular slogan, "Cuba for Cubans." He had prepared to embark on a program of land reform which would break up the big estates, many of them American-owned, and restored the property to the Cuban small farmer. He had declared against further payments, for the time being, to the hated New York bankers—a very popular move.

When Mendieta sought to undo these things, he at once faced popular discontent. He slowed up. Another howl went up from his own personal following, the Nationalists, who were bent on seeing the left wing innovations of the revolution abolished. Mendieta discovered that he stood squarely between the devil and deep blue sea. Unfortunately, he has lacked the force of character to extricate himself from his strategically unsound position.

Grau Pulls "Boner"

Noting his successor's difficulties, Grau decided to return from his voluntary exile in Mexico. The time seemed ripe. It wasn't. Grau blundered seriously. The monster demonstration which turned out to greet him numbered, according to the best available accounts, about 20,000. A Havana demonstration which can not muster at least 50,000 is a failure.

And the longer Grau remains in Havana without doing something startling, the weaker he becomes.

There are no other figures looming as likely candidates for leadership should Mendieta's waning popularity reach a point where change becomes inevitable. Hence the dread with which thoughtful Cubans await the day when the proceeds of the last sugar season disappear and the desire for activity rekindles in restive bosoms.

Sales in Europe Drop

Perhaps that day can be avoided. It could be if Cuban leaders would utilize the three-year stabilization in the sugar market granted by the Costigan act to develop diversified crops. Under the Costigan act, Cuba gets a quota of about 1,900,000 tons of sugar she may ship into this country under the preferential tariff. Last year she sold the United States 1,300,000 tons and without the Costigan act she would probably not have reached 1,000,000 tons for the current year.

Add to the 1,900,000 tons the 1,000,000 tons Cuba has been sending to Europe and the result is very close to the 3,000,000 tons experts agree Cuba must export if she is to survive. However, the export figures to Europe show a tendency to decline slowly. And at best these totals represent only a breathing spell.

What Cubans hate to realize is that the glorious war-time days are never going to return. Memories of the wealth that poured into the island while the rest of the world fought do not permit a clear focus upon realities. They make it difficult to take the decision to cut down on sugar acreage and begin promoting tobacco, vegetables, tropical fruits, and other exportable products so that the island may be relatively independent of world sugar prices.

Unless something of the sort is done and done soon, experts are at a loss to suggest how Cuba can attain the economic stability without which political tranquility is but a dream.

Radio Waves and Ripples

THE count was 13 to 0 for the indefinite tenure of Arthur Reilly in the office of president of WMAL's Breakfast Club until the Farragut Square precinct came in. That's where a gentleman who prefers that we call him "Puzzled" lives.

The voting was light to be sure, and probably inconclusive, but what there was of it was so preponderantly in Mr. Reilly's favor that we were about to be convinced the whispering newsman was turning the morning broadcast battle tide once more to N. B. C. Seductive modifiers—"dignity," "soothing," "melodious," "inspirational"—we were planning to store up against the day when we should be called on for one-word Reilly descriptions.

ELSIE FERGUSON, stage and screen favorite, recently has taken to radio. She will be heard today on C. B. S. in a scene from "Daddy's Gone a-Hunting," during the Family Theater show, 8 p. m.

But that was before we heard from "Puzzled," who lives in the Farragut Square precinct.

"I rarely tune in on anything before noon, except now and then the 9:15 news talk, as the morning programs do not interest me. On this one occasion I heard some good music and I might try the Breakfast Club again if it were not for Mr. Reilly's peculiar voice ("soothing," "melodious," "inspirational," &c.) and manner of speaking. I endure it now and then . . . if for some reason I want late news.

"It was in February, I think, soon after I bought my radio, that I first heard him. I thought he had a bad cold. As the hesitation and huskiness persisted, I began to think it might be a mannerism."

"Puzzled" hastens to add that he also thought Mr. Reilly might be suffering from a cold, or some other temporary throat ailment.

"I was amazed," he goes on, "when I saw he had the Breakfast Club. I tuned in once, to see how he would stand a long program. His voice was, as usual, husky, at times almost wheezing, and passing into a whisper at the end of many sentences. As before, he often paused, sometimes two or three times in one short sentence, seemingly for lack of breath . . . At times I have felt he would not be able to say another word. Again he hurries along, as if he feared his breath would not hold out, and apparently it does not, for the last words of the sentence are whispered. The impression given of weakness and suffering is painful . . .

"If his breathless, uncertain delivery is due to lack of knowledge how to manage his voice, he should learn. If it is an affectation he should drop it . . . Apparently, he enjoys his sentiment and religiousness . . . I wish you would inform me whether Mr. Reilly's style of broadcasting is due to some physical trouble. If so, I will refrain from criticizing him. I shall also continue to refrain from listening to it."

DURING the summer months when studio bookkeepers lay in a goodly supply of red ink, it is the practice of the bosses to employ themselves in the more or less trying business of hunting talent with which to devise new forms of entertainment, eternally hoping that these will prove sufficiently enticing to the customers to warrant the exchange of red ink for blue before the first frost.

Normally all this activity results in nothing but disappointment to a lot of ambitious tenors, sopranos, harpists, accordionists and trombone players.

But this year, things are going to be different, say the N. B. C. bosses. There are going to be new shows, and lots of them, and new talent. Auditions are to be held at least once, probably twice, a week.

To pull them through, the bosses are counting heavily on the ability and experience of Shannon Allen. Allen, it was, who wrote and produced the "Headlines of Twenty Years Ago" series for The Post.

The bosses also assure us that they will not be long in fulfilling their promise to do something important for us in the way of a sports program.

The sponsors of Lawrence Tibbett and Richard Crooks bring another fine voice to the air waves tomorrow in a move to adapt their program to the summer mood.

The voice is that of Gladys Swarthout, Metropolitan Opera contralto. Miss Swarthout's first program—"Memory Lane," "By the Waters of Minnetonka," "Waltz of the Flowers," "In the Gloaming," "Italian Street Song," "Bird Songs at Eventide," "Only a Rose" and "Message of the Violet"—demonstrates the trend of her later appearances.

Capital Society Seeks the Cool of Country Club Pools and Nearby Beaches

Third of 1934 D.C. Debutantes Now a Bride

Miss Virginia A. Mayo Becomes Mrs. William P. Smith 3d.

The third of this year's debutantes to be married was Miss Virginia Alida Mayo, daughter of Mrs. Pendleton Mayo, of Washington, and of Capt. Claude B. Mayo, U. S. N., of Seattle, whose wedding to Mr. William Preston Smith 3d, son of Mrs. Lucien Green, took place yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the 1925 F Street Club.

The bride was given in marriage by Mr. E. Pendleton Turner. She was attired in ivory-tinted satin made on simple lines, and her veil was of rose point lace, which had been in the family for generations. She carried a loose sheaf of Calla lilies.

Miss Charlotte Mayo was her sister's maid of honor. She wore a garden frock of blue organza and a natural colored straw hat. She carried a bouquet of yellow daisies. The bridesmaids were Miss Anna Smith, Miss Mary Dwight, Miss Alice Fleming, Miss Elizabeth Gill, Miss Caroline Johnson and Miss Suzanne Hill, all sister debutantes of the bride. They wore garden frocks of yellow organza and natural straw hats, and carried bouquets of blue cornflowers.

Mr. T. Winfield South 2d, of Annapolis, served as best man, and the ushers were Mr. Horace Peters, Mr. K. Daley, Mr. Harold Fangboner, Mr. Frank Wolpert, Mr. Jean de Sibour and Ensign Charles Farwell.

Upper left, Miss Virginia Squires, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick B. Squires, snapped in a smart beach costume which she will wear this season. Upper right, Miss Katherine Lea, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Robert Lea, wears a costume for the beach when it is too cool for an actual dip in the sea, but warm enough to enjoy the sands.

Miss Myers Is June Bride In Washington

Marriage to Mr. John Hill Took Place Yesterday at Parents' Home.

At high noon yesterday one of Washington's very first June brides was married. It was the wedding of Miss Persis Chase Myers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers, of Washington, to Mr. John Rowland Hill, son of the late Mrs. Evelyn Lyster Hill, which took place at the home of the bride's parents on S street. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes performed the ceremony in the presence of members of the family and intimate friends.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was simply gowned in white satin. She carried an armful of white daisies. Miss Mary Hewitt Myers was her sister's maid of honor. Her gown was of coral chiffon. Miss Leila McKnight and Miss Louise Chase Myers were the bridesmaids. Miss McKnight's gown was of soft blue and coral chiffon and Miss Myer's was of blue chiffon.

Mr. Charles H. Bradley, jr., served as best man and the ushers were Mr. Richard Gwathmey and Mr. Eugene S. Wilson, jr., of Washington.

Immediately following the ceremony there was a wedding breakfast. Mrs. Myers had on a gown of biege chiffon. Later Mr. and Mrs. Hill left on their wedding trip. The bride was wearing a smart ensemble of green and white silk.

Mrs. James W. Cummings, jr., the former Miss Marianne Harrison, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Pat Harrison, finds that linen shorts with a matching coat, and a skirt make the ideal summer costume for either beach or town.

Vacation Season Will Find Many Staying in Town

Few Society Folk Inclined to Spend All of Summer Months Away, Although Short Trips to Nearby Resorts Will Be Popular.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

With the arrival of June, and the first really warm days of summer, Capital society fairly flutters with plans for the vacation months ahead.. Although there will be a sweeping exodus for beach and mountain resorts, for trips to Europe, or to the Far West, many will remain in town.

In former years "everybody" betook themselves about the middle of June to summer homes, or to resorts where they had been going for years, and there settled for the entire season, bag and baggage. But in these hectic and rushing days very few seem inclined to spend their entire vacation, if it is fortunately more than two weeks, in one spot. A migratory spirit has posessed even the elder members of society and motor trips for week-ends, or even a whole holiday, are the order of the day.

Clubs Draw Throngs.

Even the stay-at-homes do not seem to mind their lot, for Washington provides, along with its torrid weather, numerous beautiful country clubs, where all forms of summer divertissements are to be enjoyed.

The Chevy Chase Club with its wide verandas, splendid tennis courts, rolling golf links, and out-of-doors swimming pool, is a joy to its members and their guests. Several families and numerous bachelors have already taken up their abode in the handsome club for the summer, where they may rise at a very early hour, play a round of golf, take a quick swim, and be fit for anything the day may bring before leaving for their down-town offices.

The Columbia Club, still farther out in the cool country, has inaugurated a novel entertainment for the summer. Besides the semiweekly dinner dances, there are also the informal buffet suppers on Sunday nights when the members gather on the terraces or in the lounge to while away a few lazy hours at the end of a strenuous week-end. The Congressional, Kenwood and several other country clubs nearby come in for their contribution to members who must take their vacations right here.

Active Social Season Looms At Annapolis

Winter and Spring Proved Interesting Periods at Naval Center.

Annapolis, Md., June 2.—Departure of the battleships Wyoming and Arkansas, bearing midshipmen on their annual summer practice cruise, marked the final chapter of commencement week at the United States Naval Academy, resplendent with social gayety.

The winter and early spring seasons here were unusually lively, and the summer period promises to be more pretentious than in former years. There will be a greater number of officers and their families at the local naval station, because of the enlarged classes to undergo instruction at the Post Graduate School.

Meanwhile, many officers are preparing to leave Annapolis for new assignments. Topping the list will be Rear Admiral Thomas C. Hart, superintendent, who is slated for a sea command. He will be succeeded by Rear Admiral David F. Sellers. The Harts have entertained extensively, and their departure will be regretted.

Swans.

Over a surface smooth as glass, the swans
Glide on, the waters parting as they pass
Toward the island where they have their home.
In Indian file they go without a sound.
Their smooth white wings are folded calmly back
And their proud heads are arched gracefully.
No noise disturbs the beauty of this scene
Save the soft rustle of the leaves nearby.
The sun is sinking fast and his last ray
Tinges their black and orange beaks with crimson.
Onward they move until they reach their isle
And then they disappear into the shades.

Vacation Time To Find Many Still in Town

Those Who Do Go Away Will Do So Only for Short Trips.

which is always among the most delightful of the season.

Although the anniversary date is today, the Ambassador and Lady Lindsay are celebrating tomorrow instead of on Sunday, when many of their guests are apt to be out of town on week-end trips. The spacious gardens of the British Embassy make an ideal setting for the brilliant assemblage, and on a high terrace surrounded by rose gardens, the guests gather to drink the health of "His Britannic Majesty, King George V," and to congratulate "His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador" on the great occasion.

Lady Lindsay Plans Trip.

Lady Lindsay, always a gracious hostess, will probably leave Washington this week for the summer, and will go either to Long Island, where members of her family make their homes, or to England, where the Ambassador will join her later.

The other reception will take place on Thursday when the Charge d'Affaires of Nicaragua and Mme. De Bayle will entertain from 5 until 7 o'clock in honor of Mme. Sacasa, wife of the President of Nicaragua. Mme. Sacasa is visiting in the Capital with her daughter, Miss Marie Sacasa, for the purpose of attending the graduation from Georgetown University of Mr. Juan B. Sacasa, jr., son of the President and Mme. Sacasa.

Not so long ago, the Sacasas left Washington amid numerous farewell parties, for Managua, where Mr. Sacasa, who for several years had served as Minister from his country, assumed his duties as chief executive of the Central American republic.

Washington can boast of several envoys to this city who have become chief executives of their respective countries, and can say proudly "we knew them when." Senor Dr. Don Ricardo Alfaro, now Minister of Panama, left Washington after having served here many years, to return to his country to occupy the presidential chair for a year, and again returned to our midst. Senor Dr. Don Enrique Olaya, one time Minister of Colombia, is another who answered the demands of his people and assumed the high office in his country which he still holds. Other chiefs of mission who have returned to their native heath to occupy positions in the government are the former Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Don Orestes Ferrara, who was Secretary of State of Cuba for some time, and who, with Senora de Ferrara, is now living in New York. The well-loved Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Miguel Cruchaga Tocornal, is now Minister of Foreign Affairs in Santiago, but keeps an interested ear alert for any news of the Capital in which he spent so many years.

Goes to Atlantic City.

Mrs. Gerald Roseheim, who, with her young son, Bruce, departed on Friday for Atlantic City to pass the summer, was accompanied by Mrs. Edgar Kaufman, who will be her house guest for a month.

To Be Joint Hostesses.

Mrs. Walter Taylor Wheatley and Miss Katharine Dougal will be joint hostesses at a garden tea at their home in Georgetown, 3030 P street, on Tuesday from 2 to 6 p. m., when they will open their garden to visitors and will serve tea for the benefit of the Bishop Binstead Fund. The garden tea is held under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Alban's Church.

Why Suffer Fat? End it with Marmola

You're always saying to yourself, "Oh, I wish I could get rid of that awful fat." But why don't you do something about it?

Maybe someone has made you think the only way to reduce is to starve yourself..or bend and kick a hundred times a day..or drain your system with drastic purgatives.

That's utter nonsense! Many years ago medical science discovered that obesity, when an abnormal condition, is caused by the lack of an important element which the body normally supplies.

One such element—which is the chief active ingredient of Marmola—has since been prescribed to thousands of overweight women. Day by day they have felt lighter, more alert, more energetic. Soon they find their weight satisfactory. The excess fat has simply slipped away, revealing the trim and slender figure underneath.

Sounds like a miracle, but thousands of women who have taken Marmola as directed—4 tablets a day—might well tell you it's a demonstrated fact. Indeed, since 1907 more than 20 million packages of Marmola have been purchased. Nothing succeeds like success. Marmola is put up by one of the leading medical laboratories of America.

Start today! You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day when you first discovered this marvelous reducing agent.

Marmola is on sale by all dealers—from coast to coast.

Summer Suns Will Shine on Loungers Clad in Beach Clothes, Plain and Fancy

Goodwin, Post Staff.

TURQUOISE blue and a complicated system of back straps make the suit at the left something nice for swimmers who really swim, but want to look smart. It's wearer is sitting on a white beach robe, handmade and embellished with a green palm tree wandering down the back. The girl with the dark glasses exemplifies the business-like attitude towards beach dressing, in slacks, sweater and French sailor top knot. The cigarette bummer on the right wears a play suit in terry cloth with brown shorts and bright yellow halter top. Notice her cartwheel, the two pairs of beach clogs and huge rubberized handbags scattered around. Everything in the picture is priced under $11, with most of the articles considerably less. Bridge Game Highest Test Of Manners

Sulky Losers, Instructor Types Are Among the Worst Offenders.

A Little Forbearance and Tact Will Deal With Them Effectively.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

NOTHING BRINGS good manners to a showdown like a card game.

In the 90's a popular saying went as follows: "If you want to find out whether a woman is a lady, engage her in a game of whist."

If the word "whist" were changed to "bridge," the aphorism would be as applicable today. For the woman who appears to good advantage at a dinner, on the dance floor, or on the golf course, may reveal her thin layer of good manners in one hand of auction or contract.

Trying bridge players are as numerous as they are uncontrollable. Whether they are self-appointed instructors, "coroners," sulky losers or overbearing winners, they can not be avoided.

The teacher type is probably the worst. For no bridge player wants to be taught a lesson immediately after she has trumped her partner's ace. The only way to contend successfully with the instructor-player is to allow oneself to be a pupil until after the game. After that, one can arrange never to have to go to school with the same teacher again.

To Cope With "Coroners."

The "coroner" player who delights in post-mortems is an offshoot of the instructor type. Her post-mortems are held for only one purpose—to prove her plays were good even when they didn't pan out. Fortunately, however, post-mortems can be avoided. For when the "coroner" asks, "Remember when I led that spade?" one can plead forgetfulness and add, innocently, "I never remember a trick after it has been played."

The sulky loser is hopeless from the standpoint of reformation. Ignoring her ill humor is the most convenient way to bring her back to normalcy.

Mannerisms—such as tapping on the table, humming and snapping cards into play—will usually be avoided if one becomes conscious of doing things sure to annoy other players.

The Bridge Ideal.

A charming, sought-after bridge player, however, is not so rare as one might suppose. She never calls attention to mistakes of others, gives her partner credit for good maneuvers, pays close attention to her game, knows the rules, doesn't overbid, has no annoying mannerisms, and is neither a sulky loser nor a boastful winner.

Dear H. R. M.—Will you please answer the following question for me next Sunday? Should a gentleman remove his hat in an apartment house elevator and in an office elevator? M. B. S.

Dear M. B. S.—A man should remove his hat in elevators of hotels, apartments and clubs. In office buildings and in stores, however, it is not necessary.

Dear H. R. M.—My father, a minister, is planning to perform the ceremony at my wedding. In this case, should my mother give me away? T. J.

Dear T. J.—Your mother should not give you away. Your father can both officiate and give you away. He will read the question and then reply, "I do."

Wedding Expenses.

Dear H. R. M.—Please tell me what expenses the bridegroom should bear. P. H. F.

Dear P. H. F.—The bridegroom pays for the wedding ring, the bachelor dinner, the marriage license, gifts to the best man and the ushers, their wedding ties, gloves and boutonnieres; his own boutonniere, the clergyman's fee and the honeymoon. In many American cities the bridegroom also pays for the bride's bouquet, but in New York's smart world—which sets the pace for the smart world all over the country—the bride's bouquet is considered part of the decorative arrangements, all of which are paid for by the bride's parents.

Hope Ridings Miller answers questions of etiquette in the Sunday Post. Self-addressed stamped envelopes must be included with questions when personal answers are requested.

Here's a Parable About a Beauty Who Was a Flop Until She Learned Necessary Summer Cosmetic Tricks.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

BEAUTY and the beach is the unwritten story of a modern miss and her gallant fight with sun, sand, and sea.

Put into print it would run like this: When Beauty went to the beach one Sunday she spent most of her time lying in the sun. She was wearing her brand-new rubber bathing suit, and thought it appeared to better advantage on the beach than in the surf.

She was disappointed that people did not stare at her as though she looked as fetching as she felt. Her hair was a little sticky from the salt water and her face slightly smeared with sand, but all in all she couldn't see why the bathing suit shouldn't make up for it.

By the time she left she was distressed over terrifically burned face and shoulders, and a dozen freckles clustered on her knees.

The Climax!

On Friday the climax occurred. She received another invitation to the beach. Would Beauty be afraid to go? Had a full blast of sunburn intimidated her? Readers should register suspense.

Beauty accepts. Saturday she goes shopping and buys a small black kit. She packs this with a sunburn lotion, a cleansing cream, powder, lipstick, and rouge, soap, a bottle of eau de cologne, and a comb.

When she arrived at the beach the sun was burning tropically, but Beauty donned her suit and applied a coating of lotion all over her face, arms and legs. No sooner on than it seemed to become part of the skin. Without hesitation she waded out and did a bit of coy swimming. When she made her way back to her parking place on the sand she peered into a mirror anxiously to see how well her complexion was staying on. It was still there, as though it had taken root. Opening her handy kit, Beauty varnished her lips with a new indelible lipstick, combed out her curls, dabbed a bit of eau de cologne behind her ears, and basked in the sun and flattering glances that came her way.

Later in the afternoon when she retired to her dressing room she carefully removed the lotion with a cleansing cream, took a thorough shower using plenty of her own soap, was grateful for the talcum that banished all salt stickiness, applied her make-up, her refreshing cologne, and was all ready for cocktails, tea dancing or whatever might turn up.

Fashion Foibles of the Famous

While a country tottered toward one of the bloodiest revolutions in history, Marie Antoinette, Queen of France, concerned herself with setting the styles for the feminine nobility of the nation.

This is the ninth in a series of articles on fashion whims of great women of the past.

Marie Antoinette.

MARIE ANTOINETTE, ill-fated queen of Louis XVI, and originator of the famous suggestion that the poor, in lieu of bread, should eat cake, also was the inventor of the feather fashion in headdresses—a style until recently perpetuated by presiding officers at women's club banquets.

The queen one day stuck two peacock feathers in her hair and all the court followed the fashion. Headdresses then rose to such heights that women could scarcely enter carriages.

Marie Antoinette also initiated the vogue for brown. One day she appeared in a dress of chestnut brown which was particularly suited to her fair complexion and which pleased the king so much that he commented on it, calling it "flea color." The craze for flea color then became so great dyers were unable to meet the demand. The bourgeoise particularly liked the color as it did not show soil.

Fussiness Out In Chic Child's Party Frocks

Small Girls Don't Resemble Animated French Dolls These Days.

NEW YORK, June 2 (A.P.).—The well-dressed child these days wears clothes less fussy, less sloppy, or less stodgy, and much smarter and more comfortable than in former years.

Clothes shown for small girls no longer attempt to make them look like dolls, and boys are not decked out in a smaller imitation of their fathers' garments. Simple, durable, practical clothes that allow plenty of freedom for arm and leg movement should form the basis of a youthful wardrobe.

From babyhood to the age of eight or so, small girls wear very short-skirted one-piece dresses or jersey, or little pleated skirts with hand-knit sweaters. Simple, short, tweed coats, and round hats or berets complete the day-time picture.

For party wear, the French influence appears. Delicately tucked or embroidered dresses of sheer material, cotton net, or velveteen, according to the time of year, make children feel dressed up without appearing overdressed.

Summer dresses for little girls are usually sleeveless and very thin, and may have bloomers to match. On the beach, most children wear sun-suits of jersey, and it is smart to have sweaters to match.

The schoolgirl, approaching her teens, is at her best in a simple dress of serge or wool crepe, a suspender dress of dark color with a white guimpe, or a corduroy jacket suit. Velveteen skirts with bright-colored sweaters are good for sports as well as school.

Schoolgirls will want to copy their elder sisters' party dresses, but they should be restrained to knee-length or the new ankle-length dresses of silk, net, or organdy, made as simply as possible.

To Spank Or Not? Receives Good Answer

"Let the Punishment Fit the Crime" as Well as the Individual.

By Alice Fox Pitts.

TO SPANK or not to spank is the question confronting many a mother.

Spanking a 10-year-old boy can do no good. He is apt to be almost as strong as his mother, and his resistance makes the job ineffectual. It can not hurt him, but it may breed resentment.

But take the 2-year-old child. You can not reason with him. He understands "No, no," but does not choose to heed your admonition. You know if you spank him every time he is tempted to play with the embers in the fireplace, you can train him not to do so. Shall you employ this method of discipline?

If your reply is "Yes," you have at least one eminent authority in the field of child training with you. Nature employs bodily harm as a means of teaching cause and effect, he argues. A child learns if he teeters on the top of a flight of steps, he is apt to fall and hurt himself; that if he touches fire, he burns himself. Then why is it a cardinal offense for a parent to employ the same system?

Spanking may save him from far worse hurt, or real tragedy. And carrying it a step further, spanking will teach him not to touch your cherished china, not to pull all the books from the open shelves onto the floor, or any of the other things that—in the course of his training—he must learn not to do.

What form of punishment have you found most effective—for boys or girls, for younger children or older ones? Your ideas will help other mothers. Address letters to Alice Fox Pitts in care of The Washington Post.

Informal Country Clothes Official Wives' Necessity

White Sport Things Favored by Smartest Women for Week-End Parties; Overdressing Considered Serious Sin.

ONE OF THE first lessons an official's wife in Washington learns if she wishes to be listed among those who know how to select her costumes, is what to pack in her week-end bags. Whether it be a country house party near Washington or a convention or social function in another city, her clothes must fit the occasion.

The country house parties in the vicinity, now the order of every week-end, mark the informal gathering of official and social leaders. The greatest mistake is to overdress. The Saturday night dinner and dance which form an important part of country entertaining does not require the same type of evening dress which would be proper in the city. Chiffon, lace or organdie are selected for these functions. Trains are entirely out of place, no matter how fashionable they may be.

The Classic White.

The morning clothes problem is a mooted one. Beach clothes or street things won't do. Sport clothes are always good, of course. At a recent house party the hostess and most of her women guests wore white wash frocks, simply made, for breakfast on the wide veranda. For luncheon at the country club this same group looked chic in white sport dresses with sport coats. The hostess wore a wide-brimmed white straw but the guests had on felt hats with narrow or medium brims.

Mrs. Roosevelt is wearing a navy, triple sheer coat suit with the skirt pleated all the way around, and with a blouse of brighter blue. The coat is seven-eighths length and hangs straight. With this Mrs. Roosevelt wears a dark blue straw with a shallow crown and medium brim, and occasionally a wider brimmed hat.

Mrs. Mary Rumsey at a recent evening party wore a dress of black triple sheer. A band of twisted orange velvet ribbon outlined the deep U back decolletage and ended in a bow on one shoulder.

Mrs. Edward Stotesbury appeared at a luncheon in Philadelphia in a dress of brown lace.

Twin Water Toys for Marrieds, Anchor Buckles Very Au Fait

Designers Become Waggish; Identical Rubber Zebras Are Result.

Nautical Wave Hitting the Country Shows Up Here in Trimmings.

FIRST THE roguish designers brought out twin bathing suits for mother and child. Then, sentimentality going one step further, they whipped up slacks for men and beach robes for women in identical materials; these to be worn by husband and wife.

The most remarkable emanation of all, though, is the team of rubber water toys, harnessed together so families or just friends can do their falling into the water simultaneously. There is a twin pair of fat zebras arranged in such fashion in a Washington store. They are yellow, with black stripes, and possess facial expressions sweet enough to endear them to the most hard-boiled swimmer.

HALF THE beach clothes in the country are built along sailor lines, so style dispatches say, and those in Washington follow right along with the trend. But it's in accessories and trims the fad gets into its full swing.

Rope is all over the place. Instead of straps, bathing suits now use woven yarn resembling rope. Separate belts come in the same thing.

Buckles used to be just buckles, but now they're anchors. Rope belts, particularly, are hitched up garnish play suits of the more rough and ready type in the most surprising places, at the back where the straps cross, in the apex of a front V.

Simple Type Gets Biggest Style Hand

Washington's Full of Intriguing Accessories; Bags, Shoes, Clogs.

For the Girl Who Must be Flossy, Pajama Outfits Grand.

MATTER of fact. Workmanlike. A decisive cutting away of any excess decoration. These things characterize the ascendant school of thought in things to wear for summer swimming and that great complementary sport, beach lolling.

* * * *

A certain dash. A deal of verve. A leaning toward purple nail polish, phoney eyelashes, and other such unsporting whimsicalities. That's the other side of the matter.

* * * *

Clothe yourself in either spirit and you'll more than do. Those feminine hardies who go the lengths of heading out a couple of strokes toward open water are as high style in their trim knitted bathing suits as the wide-hatted, flossily pajama-ed individuals who watch their efforts over cocktail glasses from the cabana porch.

As Regards Suits.

FIRST of all, suits. White, that great fashion-killer of last season, has slid back somewhat in popularity, at least as represented in Washington stores. But there is an entertaining example of what can be done with it to give it thisa and thata; it's knitted into wide squares, see-throughable. The upper and lower portions are discreetly lined, but the remainder of the view is unobstructed.

* * * *

Swimming shorts with halter neck tops, like those on the pictured girl standing up, are all over the place. If you think you can match them up better than the shops can, go to it. If any woman has a yen to resemble the movies' conception of Francois Villon's girl friends, she can do it in some dark blue shorts finished in ragged points.

* * * *

Rubber suits and gingham are still prevalent though their novelty is all gone. Seersucker taffeta has intrigued many designers.

Those Essential Details.

THE well-dressed beach comber with a flair for gadgets will go out of her mind with delight among the selection in Washington shops. The hats are particularly wonderful and superbly silly. Take that cartwheel in the picture. It's very come-hitherish and besides that can be folded up in some inexplicable manner in spite of the stiff brim. The French sailor affair topping off the lady with the goggles is something to notice.

* * * *

Beach clogs of all descriptions can be found. The ones on the feet below the sailor give a general idea of what's good along these lines. Rubber ones like those worn by the girl bumming a cigarette are a bit more fanciful.

* * * *

Capacious bags big enough to hold the carrier are a new beach convenience. The ones in the picture are examples. But the best of all and the more entirely ridiculous are the feedbags designed by some wit and looking much like the things horses disappear into at lunch hour.

Slacks Versus Pajamas.

ALTHOUGH some elaborate beach pajamas make an appearance, slacks and overalls of a business-like variety are getting more of a fashion hand. Again, look at the girl in the glasses. Those plain knitted navy pants will probably be the closest thing to a uniform beaches will see this summer. Sporty sweaters, like the one she wears, and mesh shirts go with slacks companionably.

* * * *

If you must be fancy though, the pajamas in which to do it are some Russian looking ones, elegant enough to shake the sand out of in the fall and wear at home.

* * * *

Designers have done themselves proud on play suits, those little businesses for lounging only. All sorts of inappropriate materials have been used, resulting in some very gay outfits—like the challis one with two rows of ruffles, one with two rows of ruffles around the hem of the brief skirt.

Gardens Should Be Planned to Fit Time and Ambition

Proper Designing Will Produce Spot for Rest in Summer's Heat

Regal and Madonna Lilies, With Delphiniums and Columbines, Are Good Neighbors for Grouping in the Border.

By Crowell Baynes.

At its best, a garden in Washington is the place where life is most endurable in hot weather. A garden can contribute greatly to the joy of existence, to comfort, to hospitality, to relief from summer heat, to enjoyment of cooling drinks and cold victuals, to rest, recreation, and refreshments after hot days. If a garden does not help to live more gracefully and comfortably, there is something wrong with the garden.

A garden ought not to be a chore, something that demands grudging work to keep it looking attractive as viewed from a living room window, something that intrudes on leisure hours and forbids restful enjoyment of its beauties. If your garden work seems burdensome and takes too much time and effort, plan the garden over again and fit it to your time and ambitions. Substitute more trees, shrubs, and greenery that require a minimum of attention, and transform it into a restful place. Cover a part of the area with flagstones, provide shade with trees or a vine covered pergola, and move out into the garden for the summer.

But if the work of gardening is a rest and recreation and a positive pleasure as a change from the day's duties—and many find it so—then again fit your garden to your time and preferences, and garden more intensively. A garden of only a few square yards with space for only a few large plants can be transformed into a home for dozens or hundreds of small plants which will require many times the care and attention of the plants they replace. Here, too, you can move into the garden and enjoy an intimacy with your garden treasures. With trees, vines and shrubs you can screen out undesirable views and make your garden what you want it to be, a retreat and a place of creation and recreation.

Regal and madonna lilies, delphiniums and columbines are particularly good neighbors in the border. They enjoy similar soil and moisture conditions. Their seasons of bloom overlap and provide most attractive groupings of color and foliage, and the plants provide mutually helpful shade for each other. If the soil is right, all three will thrive in full sun, though some shade for a part of the day is desirable. A deep, well-drained soil with plenty of leafmold is most favorable for the trio. In clay soil a further addition of sand or sifted coal ashes will improve the texture of the soil and will promote drainage. It will pay to watch for this combination in neighboring gardens this summer and to plan for fall planting of the three together. The columbines bloom first and carry their bloom well into June when the blue of the delphiniums develop both contrast and harmony with the blues and yellows of the columbines. Delphiniums should continue to bloom until the lilies open to complete one of the loveliest flower combinations any garden can hope to display. In some seasons columbine may be kept blooming to add to the picture. Snipping the seed pods from the early columbine blossoms will help to keep the plants blooming as late as possible.

Neither the delphinium nor the columbine is ordinarily particularly long-lived in gardens here, and it is good gardening to plant new delphiniums and columbines each June or July to transplant either in fall or early spring into any vacant spaces near the lilies. The madonna and regal lilies are usually long-lived and every three or four seasons may be lifted, divided and replanted, preferably in a new spot that has been well prepared by deep digging and spading-in of well rotted compost. A compost of leaves is particularly desirable for this trio, and the soil should be worked deeply enough and thoroughly enough and should have enough humus so that it will not be necessary to do more than surface cultivation for two or three seasons.

The lilies root deep, the delphiniums are eager feeders at medium depth, and the columbines feed above the delphiniums. If the soil provides plenty of plant food for all they will live harmoniously without injuring each other.

* * * *

Ordinarily you may envy your neighbor his particularly fine flowers, but there is nothing you can do about it at the time except to resolve to outdo him another season. The peony is different. Now is just the time to start your effort. Not that this is the time to plant peonies, but it is the time to get ready to plant them. Now is the time to observe peonies in bloom, to learn how they will fit into your garden according to color and season of bloom. The local nurseryman and peony specialists are glad to book orders now for divisions to be taken in September from the plants now blooming.

Now, too, is the very best time to prepare the soil for planting, remembering that the peony is a long-lived plant that does not require division for from seven to ten years, if then. The sensible thing to do is to get the ground ready accordingly and before you plant provide as much as possible of the plant food the peony will require.

Also, the peony with its fleshy roots does not do its best in freshly manured soil. So get the manure and compost into the planting place now where it can decay through the summer months and be ready for planting in September.

Peonies root deep if they have the chance. So dig deep. Throw out the top soil and throw out and discard some of the subsoil if it is of poor quality. Into the hole should go at least half a bushel of good organic fertilizer, cow manure for first preference. At this time it is possible to use horse manure safely, but not in the fall. Lacking either cow manure or horse manure, use half rotted leaves or coarse compost with a thin dusting of lime. Two or three handfuls of bonemeal or 2 or 3 quarts of bones from the kitchen hammered into small pieces, and a handful of wood ashes will help to provide a food supply on which the peony can draw for several seasons.

Mix this material thoroughly, forking it into the sides of the hole and returning the topsoil for mixing. By peony planting time it will have settled and will get the division off to a good start with a probability of peony bloom the first season. A peony rarely does its best the first year. A few blooms are evidence of satisfactory progress. By the second or third summer a peony clump should be well settled and should give a good account of itself. It does not pay to buy cheap and small divisions of peonies. "Three to five eye" divisions are what is usually quoted by nurserymen. A double clump with from six to eight eyes is usually a good buy even at double the price. You can expect to gain a year in profusion of blom from such a clump.

New Dawn—the so-called everblooming sport from the great climbing rose, Dr. Van Fleet—which was the first variety to be registered under the plant patent law, proved thoroughly winter-hardy. In several Washington gardens it came through the winter with less injury even than Dr. Van Fleet, which lost some of its long-questing shoots, particularly when exposed to winter sun as well as freezing temperatures.

The rose garden in Potomac Park is now a sight worth seeing, but gardeners who admire certain varieties may have some difficulty in identifying their favorites. The labeling of the beds was not up to par in the days when the first roses were opening. This is a suggestion to the park authorities to remedy the defect immediately, so that gardeners can get full benefit from the otherwise splendid display of standard varieties. There is really no excuse whatever for failure to label the beds adequately and informatively.

The Gardener's Calendar

What to See.

Roses in bloom at the rose garden, Potomac Park.

Cannas in beds on Department of Agriculture grounds—these plants started under glass to provide quick bloom after tulips were removed from beds.

The later peonies and the roses in every neighborhood.

Roses at the Franciscan Monastery, Brookland, and a tour of the rock garden south of the Monastery.

What to Do.

Plant dahlias—place the stakes before planting the tubers. Dahlias planted now escape blooming in hot weather and may prove more successful than earlier plantings.

Divide the polyanthus primroses, replanting in soil that has an abundance of leafmold or well-rotted compost and some shade.

Prepare for dividing and replanting of iris as required. When iris are crowded it is better to move them to new soil than to thin the clumps and replant in the same place. The new space should have time to settle after spading.

Feed well the hardy vines that are making rapid growth now, but reduce feeding by midsummer to allow wood to ripen.

Plant Iceland poppies now for bloom after summer heat.

Continue thinning annuals in rows, and transplanting of seedlings.

Remove suckers from the base of lilacs.

Weed lawns to get rid of plaintain and dandelion.

Water lawns and gardens with flowing hose rather than sprinkling with nozzle.

Queries

Query—What has caused some of my pink roses to bloom almost white this year? One or two of the bushes have both pink and white roses.—P. L. G.

Answer—The probability is that your roses are grafted stock and that the less desirable white roses are from suckers or shoots growing from the roots. Many grafted roses will require careful treatment. On roses that show both pink and white cut back the white shoots to below ground and keep them cut back if they reappear. It is usually possible to identify the sucker by difference in foliage. If only sucker shoots appear it probably means that the rose was winter-killed clear to the graft, and if the bloom from the roots is inferior the whole plant will have to be replaced. It is possible to buy pot-grown roses for replacement even at this time.

Odds and Ends of Seed.

If you have odds and ends of seeds of annuals that were planted last month—parts of packets that were not used then—don't try to save them for another year. Instead, plant them in rows rather close together in some sunny spot. They will take only a little space, and the late seedlings may prove convenient for filling in vacant spots and blind rows where seed failures, disease, or insects have marred the garden plan. Often the late seeded plants of quick growing varieties will provide better bloom and later bloom than the early plants.

A Lily Pool in the Willis Garden

Mary Katherine Willis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Willis, knows where to find a cool spot on a hot day in the Willis garden in Edgemoor.

Tour of Suburban Gardens Planned by Bethesda Club

Alta Vista, Battery Park, Edgemoor and Bradley Hills Homes Will Be Visited on Tuesday; School Fund to Be Benefited.

By Mrs. Frank M. Hoadley.

Suburban gardens, some planned by professional architects and many that have not been planned, but have grown with the loving care of a homemaker, will be on display Tuesday, when the Bethesda Community Garden Club will have a garden tour for the benefit of the welfare fund of the Bethesda Elementary School.

The tour will start in Alta Vista, a mile or so out the Old Georgetown road, and lead back toward Washington, through Battery Park, Edgemoor and Bradley Hills. Roses will replace the iris which have been so abundant during the latter part of May and in nearly every garden lilies will be in bloom either in pool or in flower bed.

One may purchase her ticket in the sassafras grove in Mrs. Ford E. Young's garden on Maple avenue and enjoy the golden yellow of the coreopsis beds and the roses, before going to Mrs. Benjamin T. Elmore's, nearby. Mrs. Young has some very fine trees and a tennis court in her grounds. There are several box-bordered flower beds that are interesting and an out-of-door fireplace, which is the delight of the Elmore grandchildren. Mrs. Elmore also has used rocks with planting in between as a border of her lily pool. There are a rose walk and a rosary and several very fine specimens of American bald cypress, a most unusual tree in these parts.

Countless Rosebuds.

Each of the gardeners will tell you that her roses have had to be cut back because of the extreme cold of the past winter, but to an amateur there seemed to be an unusual number of buds.

Turning back over to the Old Georgetown road, the tourists will stop to visit the gardens of Mrs. G. F. Hane and Mrs. M. L. Leet just across the street. Mrs. Hane has followed a tiny outlet from a drain pipe and has formed a rock garden in the shade, making lovely a place which not so long ago was just a muddy spot. On a May day, the bed of painted daisies was interesting with the pink and rose colors. Here also were wild flowers with bittersweet and honesty in the beds. Japanese and Siberian iris were in bloom also. Mrs. Leet had the dainty blue flax in bloom and she promised that the double tiger lilies would be ready for the visitors Tuesday. This gardener had the first tectorum or roof iris of Japan in the Bethesda community.

Continuing the motor trip back toward town, one will drive into Battery Park, where the rose beds which are planted in the parking along the sidewalks make this a veritable rose village. There is first the small garden at the home of Mrs. Fred O. Coe in Park lane, and then the rock garden border at Dr. Ella Oppenheimer's in Maple Ridge road. The lawn at this place seems to be sunken and around the three sides a rugged rock embankment has been built. Every possible "rock plant" seems to have found a place in some crevice. It is truly different. Another of the Battery Park gardens is that of Mrs. William J. Norfleet, where sweet william and roses will be in abundant bloom. This gardener has not neglected the vegetable garden, which is just at the back of the flower beds.

Edgemoor Gardens.

One will next drive over into Edgemoor, where the tree-shaded lanes make one wonder whether there can be any gardens because of the shade. The first stop is at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bachrach, the one-time home of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Bride. Here there is a formal setting planned along the lines of the French garden, with statues and evergreens.

Gen. and Mrs. Charles D. Herron also have a pleasing arrangement of evergreens, the blue pines at the doorway being most unusual. Here also are extensive rose beds and roses planted against trellises, which border the vegetable garden. An attractive feature of Mrs. Herron's place is the court where tea is to be served, with Mrs. Richard Doyle and Miss Jane Kingsbury ready to make the reservations.

The chairman of arrangements, Mrs. Preston Carter Alexander, has next routed us to Mrs. Robert Bondy's, where a flourishing rock garden has made colorful a difficult bit of ground alongside the house.

In the neighboring lawn, on Moorland lane, Mrs. Edward M. Willis has arranged not one pool but three, with lilies growing in each. Just back of Mrs. Willis' place is the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Harts on Edgemoor lane, with the well-arranged terraces. Fragile petunias were planted in the flower beds, bordered with pinks and sweet william.

Visit to News' Home.

Next on the list of gardens is that of the former Postmaster General and Mrs. Harry S. New, where, behind the tall hemlock hedge which gives the home its name, Hemlock Lodge, we found a large rose bed. All varieties have been planted here. In this same neighborhood is the lawn with lily pool centerpiece at the home of Mrs. Thomas T. Mott.

Our last two places in Edgemoor were those of Capt. and Mrs. M. P. Novak and Mr. and Mrs. William H. Young, across the way.

The next stop will be at the home of the president of the Garden Club, Mrs. Eugene Ferry Smith, on Bradley boulevard. Here plants have been arranged to give a succession of bloom, peonies succeeding iris, and boltonia succeeding peonies. There is what Capt. Smith calls a "controlled wild flower garden," with many rock plants here and there.

On our way to Wisconsin avenue, we stop at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Bennelycke, on Bradley boulevard. This is one of the show gardens, with the lily pool, and the miniature bridge in one corner. There is plenty of sun in Mrs. Bennelycke's garden and there is promise of many lovely roses which have been planted this year to replace those killed by the cold winter.

Those who go out from town should stop at the Edgemoor gates and purchase tickets from Mrs. Reginald Looker and Mrs. Alfred Steffen and obtain directions for visiting the gardens.

Growers Get Good Results In Seedframe

Fair Substitute Is Possible Through the Use of Packing Box.

A coldframe—or call it a seedframe at this season—is almost an essential for any gardener who wants to grow from seed a good part of the perennials for his garden. A fair substitute can be made from a packing box of almost any size cut down so that there is a slight slope from the north side to the south side of the box. The frame should be at least 6 inches deep at the front and at least 12 inches deep at the rear, and four inches deeper for each dimension is better. The most convenient size is a frame built to fit ready-made standard sash which are either 3 feet square or 3 feet by 6 feet.

Allowing for enough overhang so that the drainage from the sash will fall outside the frame, a 3-by-3 frame will be about 2 feet and 8 inches from front to back, inside the boards. Some gardeners build a frame with corner posts set in the soil. But there are advantages in leaving it merely a frame that can be taken up and moved from season to season.

A south front is desirable, and the best location for spring seeding in a frame and for winter protection of slightly tender plants is on the south side of a building.

Best for Summer Here.

For starting perennials in a Washington summer a frame may be more effective if placed a few feet to the east of a house, garage or hedge, so that it will get good morning sunshine but have some shade in the heat of the day.

Good drainage and good water supply are two principal points to be considered. In getting ready for a seedframe make sure of good drainage first. Dig out the topsoil for a depth of about 4 inches over an area about 4 feet square. Then fork over the area, and rake it thoroughly. Turn on the hose to settle the soil. Then fill the space with coarse cinders, pebbles, broken pots, broken concrete, or other material which will provide good drainage. This should form a slight mound, rounded up an inch or two higher than the surrounding soil. On this place the frame, sinking it an inch or so into the drinage layer, the high side of the frame to the north.

Next mix with part of the topsoil equal quantities of sifted eshes or sand, and either peat moss, well rotted compost of leaves, or compost made from sods. The object is to mix a soil that will hold water without becoming waterlogged. A 4-inch layer of this on the drainage will provide a good reserve of moisture for seeding.

Seed Layer Next.

The seed layer comes next. In preparing this, it is convenient to have a sieve or sifting frame with a quarter-inch mesh. Sift over material from the compost pile, discarding all that does not sift through readily. If the top soil is fertile and friable, sift it rapidly, saving only what sifts through with a few shakes of the sieve. If the top soil is clay it will pay to get a peck or two of good friable soil from a nurseryman or from a neighbor whose soil is in good condition. Then provide a pile of sifted plaster sand. Mix your seed soil from equal parts of these three—compost or peat, friable soil and sand. Mix this thoroughly and, after wetting the second layer, spread about 3 inches of this soil in the frame.

Level off this soil, and at four points, each about a third of the way from a corner of the frame to the center, set into this surface layer a 3-inch flower pot, with its base on the moisture-spreading layer. Give the frame a day or two to settle and you are ready for seeding.

These suggestions may seem to prescribe a lot of work. Three or four hours will do the job, including construction of the frame. Off and on through the summer the frame of seedlings will require perhaps ten times as many minutes of attention—five minutes one day and an hour another. It really pays to prepare thoroughly to get the best results from the seed and from the time you will spend.

Provide for Moisture.

The object of the four pots sunk in the seed layer is to provide a way to get moisture into the moisture-spreading layer of fibrous loam without the need to sprinkle the surface, which is likely to wash out fine seeds, and may promote the damping-off disease. With these pots, it is easy to soak the lower level thoroughly without wetting or washing the surface. A well prepared seed bed will draw from the lower lever practically all the moisture the seedlings will require.

With such a frame it will be possible to start a few dozen seedlings each of from six to ten varieties of perennials or biennials. With a small nursery plot for transplating thinnings it should be possible to make a long start toward next year's garden with only moderate work required in the next few weeks.

For summer seeding, two covers for the frame are required. One is the sash. The other is a lath shade, made by nailing lath to two cross pieces with spaces between the laths equal to the width of the lath.

Scores Pleased By Model Home Of Newspaper

Many Persons Are Daily Making Visits to Fine Residence.

Pleasing scores of persons daily, the third Washington Post model home of 1934 continues a delight to the eyes of homelovers and home-seekers.

Modernity is the motif of this home open at 6423 Barnaby street northwest, in Chevy Chase, D. C. Built by Paul T. Stone, Inc., it is presented by J. Wesley Buchanan, Inc., realtors; furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon. The rugs in this exhibit dwelling are from Manoukian Bros.

In the construction of this house, convenience, beauty and arrangement have been the chief aims. Featuring four homes built by the Stone Corporation, the display house, designed by Ernest D. Stevens, registered architect, is an excellent example of residential construction.

English Type.

Of the English style of architecture, this house of sturdy red brick and attractive wood paneling, nestles in a large forested lot of stately old trees, the center of a row reminiscent of an ancient village.

With its shrub-dotted, terraced front lawn, scroll front fencing, flagged walk, circling a dainty bird bath and winding to be lost in a forested background, and rustic bridge over a trickling stream, the house presents an attractive air.

Complete insulation, water-proofing, automatic heat, refrigeration and the complete electrical equipment are included. The thoroughness of the electrical equipment program has given the dwelling a second designation as an "electric kitchen health home."

The stove, clock, ventilating fan, refrigerator and other labor-saving devices are operated by electricity.

The living room is distinguished by handsome knotty pine paneling and a broad, hospitable fireplace.

The screened porch and rear portico afford views over the deep yard to the wooded hills. There are three bright, airy and well-ventilated bedrooms and two tiled baths, with tub and shower.

Roomy Basement.

A roomy basement provides ample space for servants' toilet, laundry, heating plant and a cheery, title-floored recreation room with fireplace, chimney nook and comfortable settle. There are a storage closet for guests, chairs and card tables. A graceful stariway arrangement permits entrance to the recreation room from the living room without crossing the service section of the basement.

Home's Value Not Measured With Dollars

Buyers Give Too Little Attention to the Architecture.

By Edson W. Briggs.

The real value of a home can never be measured in dollars and cents alone. There are, however, many predetermined factors entering into home ownership which have a great influence upon its monetary worth as years go on.

First among these and of equal importance is the location and environment of the dwelling, its construction and design. Upon this last element, design or architecture, too much emphasis can not be placed.

While most people concede the value of location and construction, they frequently pay scant attention to the architectural character of the dwelling. This situation is particularly unfortunate, as the well-planned dwelling costs no more and frequently less in the end than one poorly designed, while its architecture determines to a large extent its future value. Again, this lack of discrimination on the part of the home buyer, so often observed, is not calculated to encourage greater architectural effort.

Many Passing Fads.

There have been passing fads in the style of houses just as in clothes and hats, to which latter freaks of fancy the family album offers mute testimony. No less ridiculous, in retrospect, are some of the architectural syles of which, perhaps, the Victorian era produced the most grotesque. And although there has been considerable improvement in later year designs, there are still far too many mongrel types desecrating the landscape.

There is one form of architecture which has endured since the birth of our Nation and is constantly growing in appeal and appreciation, namely, the true Colonial type of dwelling.

In the entire history of architecture not a single American builder has improved upon the original conception of the Colonial home ideal as expressed in its grace of line, old-fashioned, roomy comfort, and undeniable charm.

Has Great Dignity.

Entirely lacking in complexity, the basis of Colonial architecture is simplicity and well proportioned dignity. This symmetry of de-

Model Home's Interior Wins Wide Acclaim

Furnishings Blend to Give Air of Distinction to Residence.

The interior decoration of the second Washington Post model home for the year is causing universal acclaim. Situated at 3902 Benton street northwest, in Glover Park Heights, the home is furnished by Hutchison, Inc., draped by John F. Ligon and constructed by B. H. Gruver.

The living room has a conservatively modern sofa, upholstered in a deep rust shade, and chair upholstered in a contrasting shade of green, over antique velour. The occasional chair used in this room is covered in gold material. There is a Gov. Winthrop secretary desk with a Winthrop armchair to match. The assortment of occasional tables and end tables in mahogany are furnished with lamps. A domestic Oriental rug of the Sarouk pattern covers the floor.

The dining room is furnished with a true Sheraton suite of ten pieces. The chairs are upholstered in deep blue haircloth. The rug is of the same design as in the dining room.

Off from the kitchen is a colorful breakfast set with a porcelain-top refectory table and four chairs matching it in green.

The draperies for the living room are interwoven, flowered silk damask of a brown background with urns of multicolored flowers. The dining room draperies are blue and gold bengaline weave cloth.

Draperies of the master bedroom are of green and silver embroidered silk, and those of the rear bedroom embroidered and flowered orchid satin. The glass curtains on the second floor are bungalow nets.

The master bedroom is furnished with a walnut suite having panel twin beds, a chest and dresser and a vanity with a stool. Scatter rugs form the only floor covering

The guest bedroom is furnished with an old Chippendale mahogany suite with a large double bed. The room is finished with a few scatter rugs.

On this same floor is a small room which may be used as a den or studio room. It is fitted out with a studio couch in rust and a large easy chair in green to harmonize with the couch. The few occasional pieces used in this room consist of a smoker, lamp table with a lamp and end tables. There are several little scatter rugs.

A small child's bedroom is furnished completely in maple with a crib, a chest of drawers and a maple boudoir chair in chintz.

The display home is of English-type architecture of all-brick construction. It is 20 feet wide and contains eight rooms, including four bedrooms, a reception room, two baths and a breakfast nook.

There is also an electric kitchen with every labor-saving device, including Westinghouse refrigerator and electric ventilator.

The house is weatherstripped and screened throughout. It is fully equipped with cedar closets and an automatic storage water heater. Its large recreation room has stippled walls. Kitchen and baths are Sanitas walled.

A built-in garage adds convenience in the arrangements of the home. The building site is a landscaped lot, fronted by a running brick retaining wall.

Recapturing the Charm of Yesteryear

In a community surrounded by Rock Creek Park and matching its sylvan beauty.

THE beauty of Nature is immortal . . . Man's artistry can not improve it—but can seek to interpret Nature's charm in architecture and building.

The Early American type of home is delightfully adapted to country life. It was conceived in the minds of a people famous for their hospitality, sturdy ideals of living, and love of freedom.

It was the first individual expression of American home-building art—it still remains first in the hearts of those who appreciate its grace of line, enduring charm and sturdy construction.

New Interiors Feature Post's '34 Model Home

Attractive Effects Lauded as Exhibit Is Thrown Open to Public.

A most attractive effect has been created by Hutchison, Inc., Manoukian Bros., and John F. Ligon in the interior decoration of the third Washington Post model home of 1934, now presented for public inspection by J. Wesley Buchanan, Inc., at 6423 Barnaby street, Chevy Chase, D. C.

On entering, one faces a spacious living room with a large fireplace. To the right wall is a true Duncan Phyfe sofa covered in green damask of authentic pattern. In front of this sofa is a coffee table of the Duncan Phyfe design, to match. The strictly Colonial atmosphere is carried out with a Gov. Winthrop desk and a small Duncan Phyfe chair.

To the left of the fireplace there is a beautiful Virginia fireside chair in gold. Beside this chair is a nest of tables. On the left side of this room, near the window, there is an occasional chair in corded, green tapestry.

Victory Mirror Replica.

A large victory mirror is also to be found in this room, an authentic copy of one given George Washington by his troops. The lighting is furnished by bridge, table and indirect lamps which are placed at pleasing intervals.

To the right of the living room, through an open arch, is a dining room furnished in a solid mahogany eighteenth century Duncan Phyfe suite. The pieces used are a large buffet, a corner cabinet, a Sheraton server, a Duncan Phyfe pedestal table and shield-back chairs, which are covered with a blue haircloth.

Off to the right of the dining room is the kitchen, which is carried out in a modern manner, using a breakfast set and an all-up-to-date kitchen equipment.

This home contains a recreation room which is underground. A large open fireplace with a built-in love seat gives this room a certain charm best appreciated by a visit. The pieces used here add charm and comfort. One finds a portable beverage server, card sets, arranged for use, smoking stands, wrought-iron hobnail bridge lamps, a maple coffee table, a low lounge chair, a wing-back maple chair and several occasional tables. A large cabinet radio is handy for amusement.

Bedroom in Maple.

On the second floor, to the left of the hall, is a small bedroom furnished in maple to create an early American atmosphere. There are a youth's bed, a vanity table and hanging mirror and a solid maple chair. The room is completed with several small boudoir lamps and genuine hand-hooked rugs.

The master bedroom, at the head of the stairs, is a true Colonial room. The suite, all in mahogany, consists of low poster beds, a spacious chest and dresser with a hanging mirror, a vanity with hanging mirror and bench. To add a cheery tone to the room, there is a boudoir chair covered in a gray glazed chintz. This chair harmonizes with the drapes and hooked rugs. Dainty boudoir lamps complete the furnishings in the master bedroom.

The rug in the living room is an antique Persian Sultanabad in an attractive old rose background with floral designs. Sultanabad is the name of the town where these rugs are made and when translated into English means "The Town of the Kings."

Subdued Oriental Colors.

The borders are unusually harmonious, compared with modern Orientals and the subdued tone of the colors of this beautiful piece of Oriental art gives richness and warmth to its surroundings.

The rug in the dining room is a Kandahar with floral designs set in navy blue background. The rich blue, mixed with different harmonizing colors, gives the dining room a luxurious appearance and blends well with the color scheme of the room. This particular rug, with its flashy body, will withstand hard wear and will resist the elements which so easily soil ordinary rugs. Although it is comparatively more modern, it is making a very desirable contrast with the one in the living room.

Draperies furnished by Mr. Ligon are arranged as follows: Living room, French dotted net tie-back curtains with draperies of silver flowered designs; dining room, French dotted net tie-back with draperies made of mulberry kapok; kitchen, glazed chintz in designs of red and green checks; recreation room, rough-finished ratine with red flower design; master bedroom, white dotted net tie-backs with ruffles of old blue and rose and draperies of multicolored rose and blue; den, white dotted net tie-backs with yellow ruffles and tie-backs; rear bedroom, white dotted net tie-backs with green ruffles; bath, rose and black aqua proof silk matching shower curtain.

Capital Man Buys Estate in Virginia

172 Acres, Mansion Sold to C. D. Drayton.

Leesburg, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—Historic Greenway, belonging to Elmon A. Miller, situated near Leesburg, has been sold to Charles D. Drayton, Washington attorney. Possession will be given June 15.

This estate comprises 172 acres and situated on it is a colonialbrick mansion of beautiful proportions. The original part of the house was built nearly 200 years ago, when its first master was William Meade. It at one time belonged to the late John H. Alexander, Leesburg lawyer and father of Mrs. Miller.

The house originally had only a huge kitchen and four rooms, and the seasoned red brick of this part was brought from England, as were the moss-covered brick of the walks and of the barn. A number of rooms have been added to the original part, which are very modern, yet retain the picturesque charm of old colonial times.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller and their three children will make their home in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Drayton also have three children, two girls and a boy.

Garden Furniture Aided by Varnish

The bark on rustic garden furniture, if given a coat or two of spar varnish, is less apt to snag hosiery or summer frocks. In addition, of course, the varnish preserves the surface of weather-exposed pieces.

world effect to the entire interior of the residence.

Likening the great improvement in home building to the betterment of automobile manufacture, Mr. Buchanan, its presentor, said both, like many other things, were the result of keen competition in lean years when it is necessary to give the buyer the best for the least money.

Mr. Buchanan recalled that during the "boom days" contractors built and sold hundreds of homes from uniform plans in which not even the position of an electric outlet was changed. This was because they could be built cheaply and readily sold.

Today, he added, a home must represent living comfort, economic maintenance and esthetic worth, all at a reasonable price.

The house is not, he declares, the product of a builder's spare-time plan, but the work of a registered architect who has given consideration to beauty of location and design and stability of construction. It is priced at $11,750.

sign eliminates many obstacles in building and thereby assures to the owners a maximum in space for the amount expended.

Insofar as architectural merit is concerned, the early mansions in this country attest to the artistic supremacy and intrinsic beauty of the Colonial design. The spacious landed estates of Colonial America inspired a form of dwelling particularly adapted to grace its setting.

It was conceived in the minds of a people famous for their hospitality, love of comfort, and sturdy ideals of living. It is not strange, therefore, when Americans think of home, their thoughts naturally turn to the Colonial home—its atmosphere of welcome, its enduring beauty, devoid of affectation and sham—immortalizing the traditions of early American home life.

Carbolic Acid Aids In Removal of Moss

Moss growth on stone or brick work that is to be painted can be removed by washing the surface well with water to which has been added 2 per cent by volume of carbolic acid. About an hour after this treatment, the growth should come off easily with the aid of a stiff brush and clear water.

"Hamlet" Wins Quick Acclaim By Unique Idea

Placing of Eight Houses About Courts Is New Building Wrinkle.

A visit to "the Hamlet," in Chevy Chase, last Sunday revealed an entirely different approach to the problem of building houses for sale. Here a group of eight houses has been built and so placed around three large paved courts in the interior of the block that all trades service, as well as private access to the garages, is accomplished by means of these lanes and yards, instead of by individual drives from the street to garages at the rear of the lot.

The comment of visitors to "the Hamlet," on the occasion of its being thrown open to the public, was divided between the attractive appearance of the large central court, shut in all sides by "garden fronts," with double-decked galleries, long low porches and hedged private gardens, and the livability of the house at 7 East Blackthorn street, which has been completely decorated and furnished by Schuyler & Lounsbery as an exhibit house.

This is one of the so-called "gate houses" which flank the lane from the street to the central court, and which with their high-peaked roofs, rising to the chimney at the center, have attracted so much attention while being built.

Space Is Large.

After looking through this house, it was generally remarked that the sense of space was surprising. The living room, one side of which is here shown, takes up one-half of the entire first-floor space across the front.

In the wall opposite the fireplace and bookshelves there are three large windows reaching from the ceiling to the floor, and in the east end of the room is a French window leading onto the second floor of a wrought-iron porch, which is an interesting detail of the east or garden side.

An important part of the charm of this room is its color scheme. The walls and wood trim are all a soft old yellow, which, in contrast to the chintz curtains, fades into a most satisfying background for the many interesting pieces of furniture. Most of the seating furniture is covered either in a rose biege linen damask or the same deep plum colored gayly flowered chintz as that hung at the windows. The floor is almost entirely covered with a brown rug slightly paler in tone than the draperies.

Woman Is Satisfied.

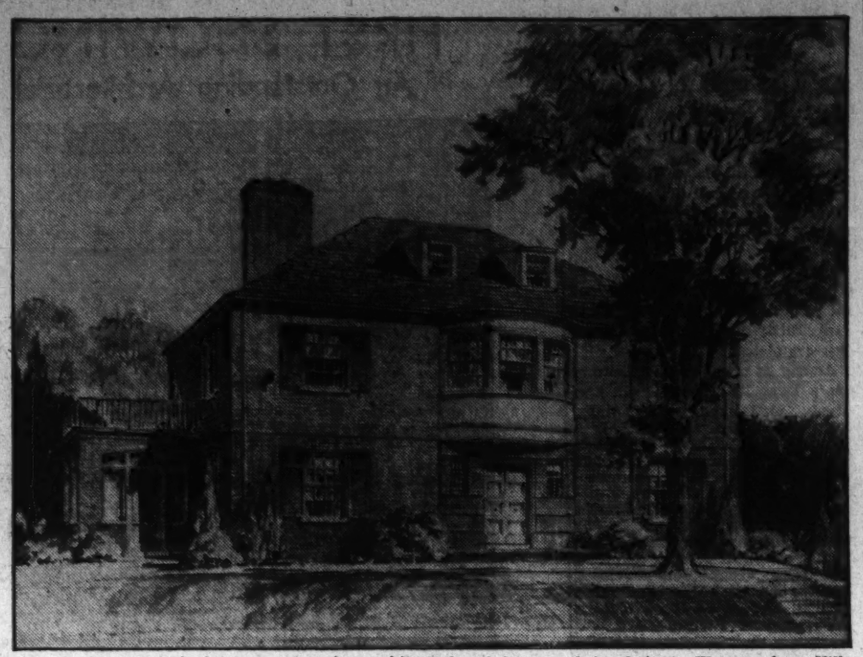
While the other rooms of the house are as interestingly done and are as comfortably livable, it was after a last glance into this living room, on leaving the house, that nearly everyone, sensing the quiet good taste in color and arrangement, echoed one woman's observation, that it was the first house she had ever seen where there was nothing she would want to change.

Aside from the rarity of finding a ready-built house displayed in this manner, there must be something of surprise in the fact that including draperies and rugs, as well as the antique furniture that has been used, this house was completely furnished as shown, for slightly less than $4,000.

Torch Best Remover For Old, Scaly Paint

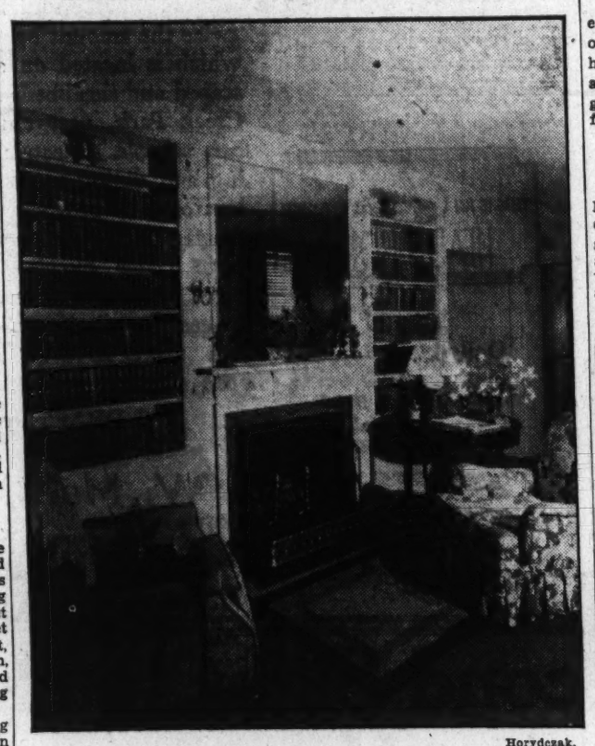
Loose or scaly paint should be removed before new paint is applied. Burning has been found to be the best method of removing such impaired surfaces from building exteriors. The torch, however, should be handled by someone skilled in its use, because of the fire hazard. An effective paint remover is recommended for places which cannot be reached with the torch.

Another New Home for Westmoreland Hills



New center hall Colonial home of antique whitewashed brick now being built in Westmoreland Hills for Mr. and Mrs. Felix Morley, by Allen C. Minnix. The home was designed expressly for its hilltop site by Wyatt & Noulting, architects, of Baltimore. Plans call for five bedrooms with two baths on second floor and bedroom and bath on third floor. The heart of the home is a particularly attractive living room opening on a terrace. A spacious library, large dining room and children's dining room also are on the first floor. Special attention has been given to modern lighting and heating, all-season ventilation and a colorful kitchen in which no convenience has been overlooked. This is one of the numerous new homes now being built in the charming Westmoreland community.

Interior of a "Hamlet" Home



Horydczak.

In The Hamlet, Chevy Chase, at 7 East Blackthorn street, this distinguished room, as furnished by Schuyler & Lounsbery, combines antique and modern decoration as its simplest and best.

HOLC Loans Aid 250,000 Homes in U. S.

$728,651,191 Issued to Refinance Mortgages Past Due.

Past due mortgages on almost a quarter million homes have been refinanced to date by loans from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, according to a report issued recently by the corporation covering operations up to May 18.

The statement showed that $728,651,191 in corporation bonds and cash has been advanced on 246,335 homes located in every section of the country. During the week ending May 18, field offices of the corporation concluded loans at a rate of about $8,000,000 a day, with transactions for the week numbering 14,367 and amounting to $47,598,450.

Fee Appraisals.

The report disclosed that the corporation has completed 792,622 detailed "fee" appraisals of applicants' homes and that 499,906 applications have been turned over to the legal offices for search of title after appraisals and preliminary investigations had been completed. Applications in the hands of "loan closers" in the various offices awaiting only actual execution and signature of the final papers number 31,138.

States that report more than 4,000 loans closed to date include Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Maryland, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Alabama, Florida, Missouri, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Kansas, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Texas, California and Washington. Ohio leads with 29,508. Michigan is second with 22,466 and New York is third with 14,878. The average loan amounts to $2,958.

26,490 Apply in Week.

Applications for loans during the week numbered 26,490, bringing the total of applications to 1,369,684. Many of these latter applications have come from home owners who misunderstood the recent amendments to the Home Owners' Loan Act, which allow loans for repairs and reconditioning of homes.

How to Kill Knots in Wood

An effective way to kill knots in exposed wood is to draw as much of the sap as possible by holding a hot iron over the knot, scraping it, and then applying two coatings of gold or silver leaf over the knot before painting.

Exercise Care With Primer.

In cases where only two coats of paint are planned for the exterior of the house, the priming coat should be laid on as carefully as the second coat, since it is impossible to cover zigzag brush marks with a single coat. Three coats will insure a better finish.

Real Estate Boards To Meet June 25

Capital Delegation to Use Liberty Limited.

Projected Federal action in the home building and mortgage financing fields, and the organization of a code authority, now in process, form the background for the discussions at the coming convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in Minneapolis, June 25 to 30.

Nationally known authorities in the fields of mortgage finance, property management, general real estate brokerage, land development and home building, appraising, industrial property borkerage and farm brokerage are scheduled to appear before the several divisional groups. Clarence F. Donohue, chairman of the Minneapolis convention committee, has arranged for the Washington delegation to use the Pennsylvania Railroad Liberty Limited, now fully air-conditioned, to Chicago and the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific to Minneapolis. The Nicollet Hotel will be convention headquarters.

A special round-trip rate of $44.30 will be in effect for the board's delegation, which plans to leave Washington Saturday, June 23. A special 10-day Pullman rate of $17.83 has been granted. Leaving Washington at 4:10 p. m. Saturday, the party will arrive in Minneapolis at 9 p. m. Sunday night.

Making Yellow Pine Natural.

To give a natural finish to a yellow pine porch floor, put two coats of good spar varnish over a priming of boiled oil, turps and japan, allowing at least three days between coats if the weather is fair, but a week if moist and cold.

CHEVY CHASE, MARYLAND

Early American houses grouped to avoid the regularity and monotony of the habitual suburban development. The group arrangement gives an unusual sense of space combined with privacy, and the manner of placing each individual house, wall, tree and shrub gives every home the maximum garden space and open view. Houses have complete cool modern Electric Kitchens and General Electric air conditioning heating plants. As much care has been expended on the finishing of the interiors as on the placing of each house in its relation to its neighbors and to the group as a whole. The house at No. 7 Blackthorn Street has been furnished by Schuyler and Lounsbery. It may be seen from 2 to 9 p. m. on Weekdays, and from 10 a. m. until 9 p. m. on Sundays.

Home Exhibit At Langhorne Draws Favor

Firm PresentingBungalows De Luxe in Select Residence Area.

The Weaver Bros., Inc., home presentation is daily increasing in popularity. This corporation is presenting bungalows de luxe in the select Langhorne community, featuring a sample house at 317 Milton avenue, furnished by Dulin & Martin and open for inspection until further notice.

To reach these offerings, motor over Key Bridge, then take Wilson boulevard, through Clarendon, Va., past the Monument to Milton avenue. Then follow signs to the equipped home.

This presentation marks an achievement in the construction and equipment of the small home of the better class. The home is immaculate, complete and splendidly located. It is of all-brick construction, with slate roof, large porch and garage.

It has a lovely living room with fireplace, dining room, two real bedrooms, fine tiled bath with tub and shower, modern kitchen with linoleum floor, latest kitchen cabinet equipment and electric refrigeration. The first floor is ideally arranged. There is a basement and hot-water heat in this house, located on a beautiful lot with shade trees.

The homes are a product of these times, and are financed by the corporation's small-home finance plan to enable thrifty families to buy their home without the risk and penalty of short-term speculative financing.

Here is a development of soundly constructed detached brick homes within 15 minutes of the departments, incorporating those features which experience has shown are required by those who live well, who would enjoy their "cronies" around their own fireplace, but who are still in inadequate quarters or a hot apartment with a bundle of rent receipts.

Here may be acquired fascinating detached brick homes, deep in a grove of virgin timber and green lawns; homes in which to rest, to exhibit with pride, with flower beds and lawn.

Dulin & Martin have completely furnished the exhibit home with the exception of linen and silverware, but including all necessary furniture, floor coverings, draperies, lamps, china, glass and kitchenware, for a budgeted sum of $985.

Sales of Small Homes Increase

Real Estate Market Being Led Back to Normal.

Fort Wayne, Ind.—Small-home sales are leading the real estate market back to normal, Arthur F. Hall, president of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., declared recently. The demand for them, he said, has doubled in the last six months.

"The real estate market today is the strongest it has been in five years, and there is greater demand for small homes of the $4,000 to $5,000 class than in any other line," he said.

"One of the lessons that I think will be proved by this depression, as has been proved in every past depression, is that a conservative, well-made mortgage is the safest investment a life insurance company can make, and that the best managed companies should carry from 30 to 50 per cent of their assets in that form of investment." He pointed to the improvement in the small-homes market as an indication that the improvement in economic conditions has reached the wage-earning families, the bulwark of the Nation.

1,500 Will Obtain Awards for Study

Between 1,400 and 1,500 students in the night school conducted by the American Savings, Building and Loan Institute for professional training in the home financing field will be awarded certificates for one-year courses completed this June, it is announced by W. R. Gibbon, of Los Angeles, president of the institute. One hundred will receive three-year diplomas.

Sixty chapters in 21 States are conferring certificates and diplomas. Mr. Gibbon points out that it is not only the largest graduating class in the history of the institution, but that a much larger group of cities than ever before is represented.

Government of Belgium Lifts Carbon Black Duty

Under a newly enacted law, the Belgian government permits importation of carbon black into Belgium duty free, provided importers prove to the satisfaction of customs officials that the product will be used exclusively in the manufacture of rubber and ebonite, paint products, polishes, printing inks and papers.

Curb on Swindles Is Urged by HOLC

Additional drastic power to curb swindlers who seek to mulct home owners applying for mortgage relief from the Government is provided in the amended home owners' loan act, it was stressed by the board of directors of the Home Owners Loan Corporation recently in a statement commenting on a one-year prison sentence recently imposed by a Buffalo (N. Y.) judge. The convicted man was found guilty of collecting $110 in three "fees" from a home owner, under the pretense of aiding him to obtain a loan.

Since the first offices were opened the corporation and applicants for loans have been embarrassed in many localities by persons collecting fees from home owners for so-called "influence" in the expediting or granting of a loan, or for "legal" or other advice.

The new law makes it a felony even to solicit or "attempt to collect" unauthorized fees or commissions from applicants, regardless of whether or not money is actually received. Convicted violators are subject to imprisonment up to five years or a fine of $10,000 or both. Many racketeers are serving jail sentences for the offense and others have been indicted. Warnings have been issued by the corporation in every State, urging applicants to avoid such solicitation.

D. C. May Sales Of Electrolux Indicate Merit

Capital Housewives Take Advantage of Offer to Reduce Budget.

Sales for May in the gas refrigerator drive of the Washington Gas Light Co. more than doubled the quota set for that month in the novel contest being staged by the refrigeration committee of the American Gas Association.

The success of the sales activity in May was even more gratifying in view of the fact that the quota was greatly increased over April. Washington Gas Light Co. is participating in a National drive sponsored by the American Gas Association, to bring to a larger number of housewives the benefits and advantages of the Electrolux air-cooled gas refrigerator.

With business revival and the release of latent purchasing power, home modernizing has found favor with women who are realizing that outmoded equipment has no place in the home of today, where the trend is toward relieving the home executive of the drudgery of her daily routine with labor-saving appliances that are efficient and colorful in design to harmonize with the surroundings.

The hundreds of Washington housewives who visit the attractive show rooms of the Washington Gas Light Co. daily at 411 Tenth street northwest, leave no doubt in the minds of observers regarding their interest in the modernizing of the kitchen. The variety of Electrolux models on display features air-cooled gas refrigerators to meet the needs of every home with a wide price range and budget purchase plan that adds no extra burden.

13 Cents Daily Buys One.

For as little as 13 cents a day every Washington home can have this most satisfactory type of refrigeration which introduces a new principle of freezing, whereby a tiny flame does all the work. This ingenious application has eliminated machinery and moving parts and consequently there is no noise or vibration, with longer life and carefree operation. Home executives throughout the United States have accepted the Electrolux with enthusiasm and the thousands of installations in Washington homes echo the National acceptance of satisfied users.

The gas refrigerator is extremely low in cost of operation, a double advantage when one considers that Washington gas rates are among the lowest on the Atlantic Seaboard. Aside from these outstanding points of interest are many new features and novel innovations that catch the housewife's eye and meet with her ready approval.

J. D. Dingwell, jr., assistant general sales manager of Washington Gas Light Co., in commenting on the widespread interest of Washington women in the Electrolux and the splendid showing of the sales organization in shattering quotas, stated: "The modern housewife uses modern methods and equipment. She realizes the established merit of the Electrolux air-cooled refrigerator and the economies which it effects in food preservation and prevention of waste and spoilage, that make it an investment which pays for itself many times during its long life.

Sales Speak for Product.

"The splendid record turned in by the sales organization in April and May, the first two months of the National drive, show the result of a carefully planned campaign to bring to the attention of Washington homes the real story of the Electrolux. With a substantially increased advertising appropriation, used in radio announcements, newspapers and direct mail supported by energetic sales activity, our entire organization has functioned in the spirit of a team cooperating to the fullest for the achievement of a definite sales objective."

Washington Gas Light Co., in merchandising all of its gas appliances, has always presented to the public equipment approved by the Good Housekeeping Institute, the American Gas Association and its own engineering laboratories against a broad background of home modernizing, to bring an increased number of satisfied users the results of modern gas research in appliances of greater beauty and utility for the modern home.

Crime Fostered By Bad Housing

Recent research has disclosed that delinquency is concentrated largely in areas of bad housing, and it has been asserted that in one large city, in an eight-year period one murder took place among the 100,000 best housed people, while 210 murders occurred among the 100,000 worst housed people.

Policing, fire prevention and maintenance costs of blighted areas exceed the tax income from these sections, and are estimated in one city to be approximately five times the taxes levied in these areas.

The demolition of slum districts offers an immediate opportunity for employment, particularly to laborers and helpers, and when combined with carefully prepared plans will remove festering neighborhoods and enhance community values.

Homes Group Is Being Built In Foxall Road

Georgian Colonial Style Gives Individuality and Charm.

An interesting and most attractive community group of three houses is being built by Waverly Taylor, Inc., in Foxall at 1505 to 1509 Foxall road. Although individual in the charm of their design, they are part of a community of over 100 homes built by this progressive firm of realtor builders.

An outstanding feature of this group is the design which gives the appearance of a single large house with an addition added to one side. The architecture is Georgian Colonial, with rich red brick, white entrance doorway, trim and cornices, and green shutters on the first-story windows contrasted with white ones on the windows above.

Each of these homes will have seven rooms, including an attractive lounge in the basement with extra lavatory room adjacent. There is a real fireplace in the living room and the windows of both the living and dining rooms will be equipped with Venetian blinds. The double rear porches will be screened with bronze wirecloth, affording a delightful living porch on the first floor and sleeping porch on the second floor.

All Equipment Automatic.

The equipment will be fully automatic and all gas, including gas boiler, Electrolux refrigerator, modern table-top range and storage water heater.

The location is within a block of the new Rose Lees Hardy Elementary School which was dedicated only two weeks ago. There are stores within a short distance and both street car and bus transportation.

Foxall road, on which these houses face, has been recommended for widening to conform to the highway plan of the District of Columbia. When completed, the full width will be 120 feet, with a broad boulevard 40 feet wide flanked on either side by wide tree space, sidewalk, and parking. This improvement to the foreground will supplement the present delightful view across the valley of the Potomac to the hills of Virginia.

Community Is Desirable.

These homes are fortunately located in a community which has convincingly demonstrated its desirability to the many professional, administrative and military service families that have made their homes there. Surrounded by Government parks, magnificent private estates and the future Potomac Valley Park, and protected by deed covenants and city zoning, its permanent value is assured.

Building Permits

Private construction in the District in May had a total valuation of $773,595, statistics prepared by the office of District Building Inspector Oehmann reveal.

This was a decline of $319,665 from the previous month's total, but an advance of $129,425 over that of May, 1933.

Of last month's total, $539,025 represents new building and $234,570, repair. Value of new work by section was: northeast, $71,000; southeast, $91,100; northwest, $372,925; southwest, $4,000. Repair work: northeast, $20,385; southeast, $54,205; northwest, $158,720; southwest, $1,260.

Permits were issued last month for the erection of 90 brick, two stone and eight frame structures. One brick and five frame were razed.

Permits issued provided for erection of 76 one-family dwellings with a total value of $434,000, and five apartments accommodating 20 families and costing $45,250. Of the dwellings started, 67 are of detached, two semidetached, and seven of row type.

Permits issued during the week included those for the following structures:

Rose & Koplin, six 2-story stone, brick and tile dwellings at 1320 to 1330 Rittenhouse street northwest; cost, $42,000.

Jacobson Bros., three 2-story brick, tile and frame dwellings at 1334, 1338 and 1342 Somerset place northwest; cost, $21,000.

Manual to Outline Construction Code

Issuance of a manual of information on the construction code in all of its divisions has been authorized by the general assembly of the Construction League of the United States, an affiliation of more than a score of National trade associations within the industry.

The manual will be issued quarterly and will contain copies of all chapters of the construction code, bidding practices, compliance features and other data indispensable to conformity with the purposes of the recovery act and the code.

It is expected that the first issue will be available early this month. Weekly supplements to the quarterly manuals will be issued, giving the latest information on all divisions of the industry. Orders for the manual may be placed through the Washington headquarters of the league.

More Funds Needed For Program of PWA

Unless the PWA construction program is substantially augmented in the near future by additional Federal appropriations, there is bound to be a catastrophic drop in the volume of construction which will mean increased unemployment and a reversion to the hopelessness which was characteristic of the National attitude before the recovery act was put into effect, Edward J. Harding, managing director of the Associated General Contractors of America, recently told the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, at hearings on the La Follette public works bill.

Needed Construction Seen Employment Aid

Stimulation of needed construction of small homes in which long-time financing is required will result in much immediate and permanent employment, the NRA's durable goods industries committee states in its recent report to President Roosevelt.

The committee points out that 76 cents of the building dollar goes to labor, of which 44 cents is spent at the site; 21 cents at the factory, mill or with the dealer; 7 cents at the source of the materials used, and 4 cents in transportation.

Associations Show Sound Reserve Base

U. S. Building and Loan League Head Reports on Finances.

Chicago.—The steady reserve position maintained by building and loan associations during the last two quarters is pointed out by the United States Building and Loan League, as pending legislation proposing the insurance of investments in these associations points attention to their financial status.

A cross section of associations in various States shows that the combined reserves and undivided profits of those reporting stand at 5 and 6 per cent of their total assets as of April 1 and that these cushions against loss have varied little since October 1 of last year. Increases of 3-10 and 6-10 of 1 per cent in the total reserves during the past three months are shown by the consolidated reports from two State leagues of associations.

Morton Bodfish, executive vice president of the United States League, points to these data as evidence of the conservative management being applied to the savings of the 10,000,000 people who are supplying home financing funds through the channels of building and loan associations.

Finances Are Sound.

The sound financial structure which has been built up here is one more reason why existing institutions should continue to be the instruments of mortgage financing for homes, he says.

In nearly all cases the reserves exceed the requirements in the State laws by a substantial amount, it is pointed out. Insurance of the shares in the associations thus becomes a "pooling of their safety rather than a pooling of their risks," says the National official.

New Plumbing Often Needed In Old Houses

Modern Fixtures Can Be Installed Today at Thrifty Prices.

The quaint doorway, the long windows in the living room, the graceful cherry bannister, in an old house are charming. Yet many a person who yearns to own such a place, and perhaps has his eye on a house that can be bought at a gratifyingly low price, hesitates to do so because of the condition of the bathroom. But the task of renovating is not impossible; modern plumbing equipment can be installed in any house. The cost varies with the work to be done, but in comfort and appearance the expenditure is worth while.

Among the fixtures which appeal to the average home-owner is a group consisting of a tub of modernistic design, a lavatory to match, and a closet of harmonizing design. The tub is of the built-in, easy-to-clean type and all fittings for the tub and lavatory are chromium plated. Although the price to the consumer is less than $100, the three fixtures constitute an ensemble of pleasing uniformity.

White and Colors.

Obtainable in white or in colors, these fixtures lift the bathroom to the most interesting room in the house. From the fixtures in this group the choice may vary in the direction of lower cost or upward in the de luxe class.

If something better is desired, the home-owner may have a lavatory of vitreous china, either of the walls hung or pedestal type. Also in the de luxe class are the ultra-modern tubular lavatory and the lavatory in a dressing table design, with two metal legs.

Closets, too, present a wide range of choice. The washdown type meets the demand for strictest economy. Siphon action closets, however, are more efficient while the siphon jet type has a still more positive flushing action. The newest development in water closet design is a fixture made all in one piece.

Silence Vital Feature.

Quiet action and an efficient flushing mechanism are the two most important features. Unless the purchaser himself has the opportunity to test the operation of a closet under water pressure, he should take the advice of a master plumber.

Bathroom accessories, too, are offered in a wide variety of designs at varying prices. Since a close matching of the colors of the towel bars, soap dishes, and paper holders with the colors of the plumbing fixtures is desirable, it is advisable to see to it that the accessories are made by the same manufacturer as fixtures.

The most important consideration in the choice of plumbling fixtures is to seek the advice of a reliable master plumber. The home-owner who consults an expert will find that quality and good looks need not be sacrificed even though the budget is restricted.

Housing Plan Gets Interest Of Subdivider

Oakland, Calif., Operator Reveals Development Idea for Homes.

John F. Maury, realty operator and developer, is enthusiastic over an ideal moderate-priced housing plan called to his attention last week by M. T. Minney, of Oakland, Calif.

The plan calls for 360 homes, the ground closed in by strips of parks from all existing highways. All houses front each other with gardens between, with one sidewalk the only thoroughfare running in front of the houses. No house will front on the street. One main thoroughfare crosses the property. From this roads radiate with additional private driveways allowing for private parking for cars.

The roads running to the rear of the homes need not be wide. In this case they are 30 feet, leaving about 20 per cent of the subdivision usually taken up with wide streets, to go to playgrounds and parks, all of which will be laid out and developed in a uniform, systematic manner. There are underground passes where the children will need to cross thoroughfares to school or stores or playgrounds.

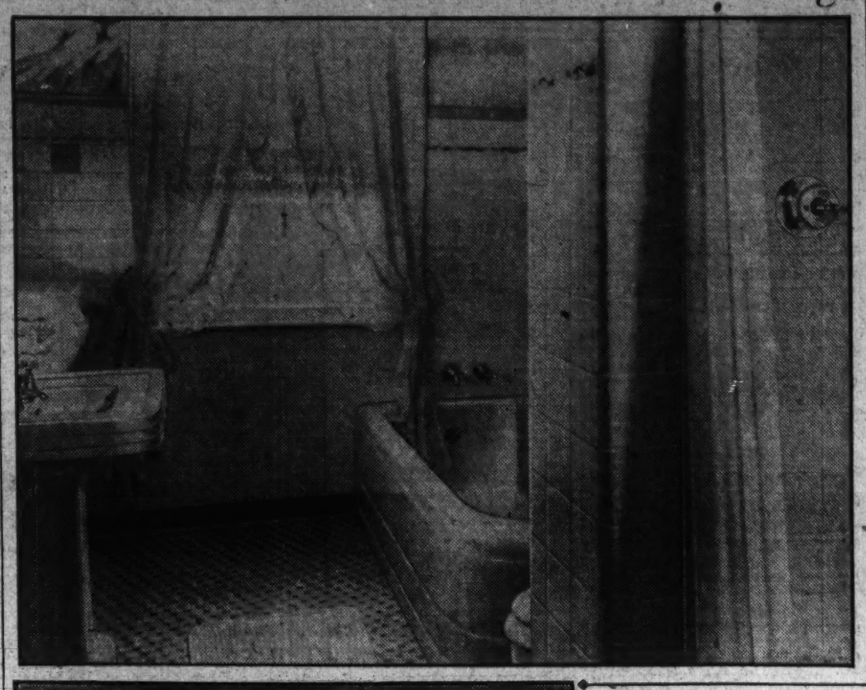
No pedestrian travel at grade crossings or thoroughfares will be necessary. By buying the land in acreage and developing the project, thus enabling the builder to buy all materials wholesale, these homes will cost the buyers much less than those built singly or in small units.

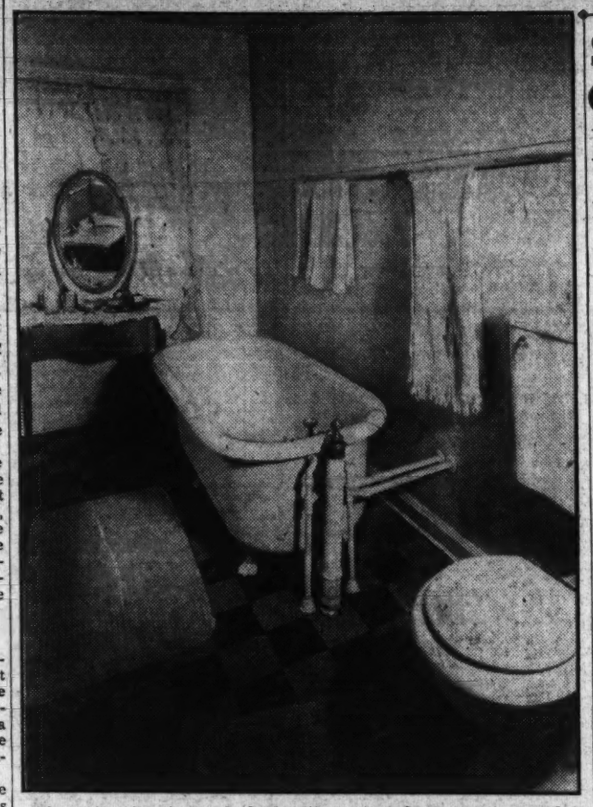
Mr. Maury says a project of this character near Washington could be made a shining example for all the country. Now that the Government is contemplating financing new housing and reconditioning on such a large scale, it would be a most opportune time to build such a model housing unit at Washington.

Extra Coats Conserve Paint.

It is less expensive in the long run to apply a sufficient number of coats when painting. Tests have shown that two coats of paint applied to a frame siding every four years give better service than one coat applied every two years.

"Before and After" in Bathroom Remodeling





The ugly, claw-footed bathtub with water pipes exposed can be replaced by a modern built-in tub in renovizing any bathroom. A three-piece ensemble can be purchased for as low as $100, and other expenditures can be adjusted to the remodeling budget. Today's illustrations show another of the remodeling projects in the "before and after" series presented weekly on this page.

Old Furniture Proves Charming When Painted

Refinishing odd pieces of old or worn furniture frequently solves the problem of a new color scheme for the home. In almost every house there can be found chairs, chests and other unrelated pieces which can be made into a suite by refinishing them in a single color with lacquer or enamel.

Avoid Improper Application.

Paint should never be applied to copper or brass before the surface has been properly treated to eliminate all grease. Effective treatment is accomplished by scrubbing the surface with gasoline or etching it with blue vitriol.

Old Paint Poor for Priming.

The use of old, leftover paint as a priming coat is not recommended, since the primer is the foundation for all future painting and should be carefully applied with the best of materials.

Savings-Loan Gain Revealed By Home Banks

Federal Help Stimulates Mortgage Recovery Over Country.

A steady gain in the number of Federal Savings and Loan Associations being organized is forecast from a provision in the amended Home Owners' Loan Act, which increases the maximum capital the government may invest in these institutions, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board stated today.

Promotion and encouragement of Federal Savings and Loan Associations is a major part of the board's three-way function to revive and permanently stabilize home mortgage finance. The associations are intended to assist the flow of private capital into home loans in cities and towns where additional home-financing sources are required.

Already 314 such institutions have been organized under Federal charter in 34 States with $38,079,129 in private share subscriptions. An active campaign for the organization of associations and the conversion of associations existing under State charter is now in progress nationally.

New Oil Discovered For Drying Varnish

A new process for converting turpentine into a drying oil is reported by German inventors. In combination with rosin ester, the process produces a varnish which dries in 18 hours to the point of being impervious to dust, and in 24 to 36 hours is hard enough to be sanded or pumiced.

Keep Paint Can Closed.

Paint contains volatile ingredients which evaporate, and it should not be left in an uncovered can overnight. If cans are left open the solvents evaporate, skins form on the paint, and thinning becomes necessary before the paint can be used.

Barring Insects From Paint.

Use of oil of cedar or orthodichlorbenzene has been found effective in keeping insects away from fresh paint. Pour the liquid in a shallow dish and place it in the room that is being painted.

Real Estate Personalities

Election of F. Eliot Middleton as a member of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers of the National Association of Real Estate Boards numbered the 280th membership in this National appraisal body. Mr. Middleton is a vice president of the Washington Real Estate Board and has served as a member of its appraisal committee. During the past 24 years, Mr. Middleton has been actively engaged in the several phases of the real estate business, having handled the rental, sale and construction of properties in the District of Columbia and nearby Maryland.

While continuing his activity along these lines he has devoted much time to the study of real estate appraising. He has represented the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department in the acquisition of private property for the Triangle development; the extension of Rock Creek Park playground and other Federal projects. In addition to this he has appeared in the local courts as a witness in behalf of property owners in street extension cases, and has served as an appraiser for local banks and trust companies in loan applications and the settlement of estates where the value of real property was involved.

The American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers is a division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, organized specifically for the purpose of developing and stabilizing appraisal methods and procedure.

The Toledo Guaranty Corporation, which recently opened its Eastern offices in the Woodward Building, announces the appointment of Leland D. Abrams to its real estate division. Mr. Abrams will specialize in new houses and building lots. He has been identified with Washington real estate since 1918. In 1921 he became a partner in the Keystone Real Estate Co. Mr. Abrams specialized in real estate loans, financing builders with construction loans. From 1929 to the present Mr. Abrams has operated his own office, specializing in the sale of residential building lots, acreage and investment properties. In speaking of the future in Washington real estate, Mr. Abrams said:

"There is ample conclusive evidence that Washington property values are staging a come-back right now, and it is my firm conviction that the next few years will witness the greatest growth in housing development that the District has ever known."

Rocks in Garden Add To Home Appearance

Rocks placed to decorate the garden may be considerably enhanced in appearance if sprayed with a little paint in soft, subdued shades—deep slate gray, mossy green, ashes-of-roses, or dark gray-blue.

Prepare Only Day's Supply.

The practical painter should thin down only enough color to last through the day, mixing fresh color each day for each day's work, rather than thinning enough to paint the whole house and taking a chance on the weather.

Hints About Repainting.

A smooth, clean surface is necessary for a satisfactory paint finish. A light treatment with very fine sandpaper is advisable for new and old surfaces. If grease is present, it should be removed with turpentine or other paint thinner.

Improved Inspection Of Buildings Is Urged

A plan charging higher fees for building permits, using the funds so secured to build up municipal building inspection departments, so that they could render a definite service to building owners by carefully inspecting buildings, was advanced at the recent annual meeting of the Building Officials Conference of America, held at Boston, by Leighton T. Bohl, professor of civil engineering at Brown University.

Lacquer Saves Toys From Being Destroyed

The life of children's toys may be prolonged considerably if they are given a fresh coat of lacquer now and then. Lacquer dries quickly to a hard, durable finish and gives new life to the familiar, cherished playthings.

Three Villains Wreck Homes, Owners Hear

Frost, Moisture and Cold Should Be Foiled by Good Paint.

Home owners are warned that "Messrs. Frost, Moisture and Cold" are three home-wrecking villains" in an article on spring painting appearing in a recent issue of Ladies' Home Journal. Accompanied by cartoons which picture the forces of weather as leering rascals in high silk hats and old-fashioned mustachios, the article urges home owners to "do tricks with paint" in order to beautify and protect their property.

Personifying harsh weather and its disastrous effect on unprotected homes, the article says: "Frost cracks his way into places; Moisture seeps in insidiously, leaving rust and ruin in his wake; Sun, beaming as he plunders, goes his jovial way, blistering and searing. No unprotected window ledge, porch step or roof flashing, no uncared-for siding, shingle or downspout escapes their devilment."

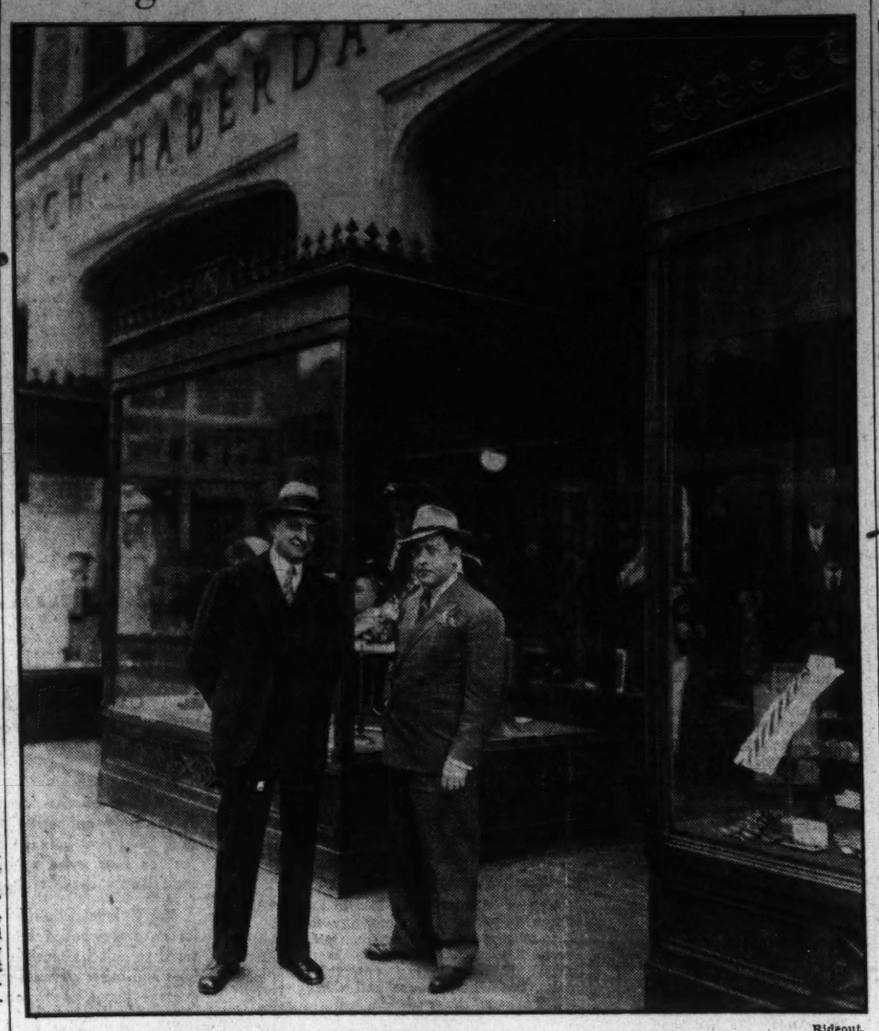
Calling attention to the season of the year, the Journal article continues: "Take a good hard squint at the outside of your house. See what sort of mischief the weather has been up to. Ten to one your house needs painting. If the painted surface is glossy and smooth, you're foiling the home-wrecking villains; but if the gleam has gone out of the paint and the surface is dry and chalk-like, better call up your painter and have him check. Moisture and sun may be sneaking up on your pocketbook with a villainous 'Heh! Heh! Heh!' "

"The best method of tricking the villains," the article concludes, "and of minimizing their costly dirty work, is to have adequate paint protection for all wreckable surfaces. Save the surface and the inside will be okay."

Heat Rules Painting.

Exterior painting should be done only in dry weather and when the thermometer registers at least 40 degrees. In colder weather the moisture that is generally present will condense on the surface and interfere with good results.

Raleigh Haberdasher to Be Air Conditioned



Rideout.

Willis H. Carter (left), famous expert on air conditioning, meets Clarence Grosner, president of Raleigh Haberdasher, 1310 F street northwest, to congratulate him on completely air conditioning his entire building.

Store Installs Carrier Air Cooling Plant

Raleigh Haberdasher to Make Atmosphere as Cool as on Ocean.

In a few days the Raleigh Haberdasher will have completely installed in its entire building Carrier air conditioning equipment, supplied by the National Electric Supply Co.

"Through the long, hot, days of a Washington summer," the store's announcement states, "our Carrier air conditioning weather maker will provide cool, clean, healthful climate. Let F street sizzle, boil and curl up with the heat, the Raleigh Haberdasher will welcome you into an atmosphere as refreshing and delightful as the decks of an ocean liner.

"But don't dread any sudden shocks or unhealthful chills. The weather maker causes no dangerous drafts, no unpleasant humidity, but scientifically cleans the air, gently circulates it and yet maintains a uniform temperature of exactly 10 degrees colder than the street. Thus you are provided with the ideal ratio of temperature at all times, for perfect comfort."

The store announces that this is the first entire commercial building in Washington to be completely air-conditioned, and that this is the latest scientific development in air-cooling. It is the very last word and most up-to-date method of air conditioning, entirely separate and distinct from the method of freezing and cooling in operation prior to this year in general usage.

The air in the store is drawn from the outside into the Carrier units known as a "weather maker." It passes through banks of glass wool filters that take out all the dirt and dust. Then it is drawn over cooling coils and excess moisture removed. The air is actually washed as it passes over specially designed surfaces.

This air is then distributed through the store, the result being clean, cool, fresh air in constant circulation.

"The world outside may be sweltering in the nineties," the announcement concludes. "Air so heavy with humidity that it settles down on you like a blanket. Yet, with a Carrier "weather maker" in our store your weather is made to order and you can actually defy the weather man."

Irby won the combined cross-country riding and jumping competition, winning the silver trophy and blue ribbon for this year's class. Lieut. Irby and two other officers had scores of 100 per cent in the jumping contest.

Lieut. Irby expects to return to Washington shortly.

New Paint Products Resist Iodine Stains

Manufacturers are now producing paint products which resist iodine stains, ink stains, wagon grease, and bacon smoke, all of which wash off without the use of scouring powder. A wide variety of attractive colors and finishes are available for kitchen, bathroom and other surfaces subjected to hard wear or unusual conditions.

Materials Cost Quarter Of Outside Painting

Only one-fourth of the entire cost of an exterior painting job goes into materials. The other 75 per cent is spent for labor. "Inexpensive" paint, cheaply manufactured or made from inferior ingredients, is one of the most short-sighted forms of economy. "Bargain" products do not cover as much surface and do not last as long as a paint of proven quality.

Painting Under Porch Floor Bars Dampness

Painting the under side of a porch floor is an excellent way to keep moisture and dampness from coming through and causing the paint on the upper side to blister and peel. If the house is just being built, paint the boards before laying them in place.

Changes Suggested To Brighten Home

A few simple changes on the exterior of the home often change the appearance of a structure. A new front entrance, a new roof of colorful material, a coat of paint for the side walls and trim, work a tremendous improvement in the appearance of the average home.

Germs Chased by Paint.

The National Tuberculosis Association pointed out in a recent bulletin that one of the easiest ways to drive out germs that have nested in the house is to "clean up and paint up."

White Lead Mixtures Should Avoid Sulphur

White lead can be mixed with all pigments that do not contain sulpher, but it should not be tinted or mixed with sulphides, such as cadmium, King's yellow, ultramarine blue or green. If this is done, black sulphide of lead will be formed, causing discoloration.

Oxalic Acid Solution Aids Door Refinishing

To refinish oak doors and sash, remove them and place horizontally, giving them a coat of paint remover to soften the old varnish before scraping. A solution of oxalic acid will remove any discoloration. When dry, sandpaper, dust, refill and finish as new work.

Stocks Trim Loss in Rally; Close Down

Week's Sales Hit Bottom Since 1923; for Day, 410,110 Shares.

New York, June 2 (AP).—Rallying tendencies today closed the slowest five-day week on the stock exchange since August, 1923. After the decline of the past three sessions had extended into early trading, leading shares stiffened and recovered part or all of their early losses before the finish.

Trading increased a little but not sufficiently to alter the week's total much.

Turnover on the big board during the two-hour session was 410,110 shares, making the total for the five days the exchange was open 2,466,421. The previous low record for a comparable period was 1,923,500 shares for the week ended August 11, 1923.

Grains Fail to Aid.

Gyrations of the grain market continued to exert little influence on stocks. In fact, Wall street felt relief at prediction of rains in some of the drought areas and actual rain in Canada, although grains tumbled and dollar wheat went off the board in the Chicago futures market. Relief to the drought areas was regarded as more important than the break in wheat prices.

The share list as a whole failed to regain all early losses and the average price of 90 stocks closed off two-tenths of a point at 74.2, a new low for the year. However, the market did not penetrate the extreme lows made on the sharp dip of May 14, when a rally set in before the close.

Final changes were mixed and narrow. U. S. Steel common and Bethlehem Steel recovered fractions of their previous losses after selling at new 1934 lows. American Telephone, Electric Auto-Lite and National Biscuit rallied to show fractional gains at the finish.

On Losing List.

On the other hand, net losses of fractions to 2 points were recorded in Allied Chemical, American Can, Santa Fe, General Motors, Chrysler, General Electric, Westinghouse, New York Central and International Telephone. J. I. Case advanced more than a point in the face of the break in grains.

While European gold currencies rallied moderately against the dollar, recouping part of their losses of earlier in the week, high-grade bonds held firm around recent top levels.

The stock market lacked outstanding stimulus in the week-end news. Better support encountered by leading stocks as they approached the extreme May lows encouraged week-end short covering and a little outside buying.

Strike Outlook Reflected.

Improvement in the Toledo strike outlook was reflected in firmness of Electric Auto-Lite. The threatened textile strike also was viewed in better light as result of Administration efforts to avert it.

General Motors sold a new low for the year within a fraction of 29. Motors generally lagged on the rally, coincident with Cram's estimate that automobile production for the week, which embraced the Memorial Day holiday, declined to 54,185 units compared with 76,281 the previous week.

Reports of a war debt understanding between England and the United States and completion of stock exchange control legislation at Washington had no perceptible effect upon markets.

Wool Market.

Boston, June 2 (A.P.) (United States Department of Agriculture).—The demand for wool was extremely limited in the Boston market during the past week. Dealers asking prices on territory lines were firm despite the very restricted buying. Inquiries for fleece wools were more numerous, but few sales developed. Country packed lots of Ohio and Michigan medium wools to arrive were offered at 31 cents in the grease delivered East.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Report of Mr. Crowley on Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for First Five Months Is Encouraging, but More Facts Needed.

By Ralph West Robey.

Mr. Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, properly is proud of the record of his organization during its first five months of experience. In a current announcement he points out that to date not a single bank has failed and made demands upon the guaranty fund. A couple of banks, it is true, have got in difficulties, but as a receiver has not been appointed in either case, the FDIC has not had to advance any funds.

By contrast, Mr. Crowley gives the figures for the corresponding months from 1922 to 1932. The average total number of failures for the months of January, February, March, April and May of those years was 374. Aggregate deposits of these banks was $1,300,000,000, so that in the first five months of each of these ten years there were banks with $130,000,000 of deposits that were forced to close their doors through an inability to meet the demands made upon them. Against this Mr. Crowley sets the figure of only two banks that were members of the FDIC, with total deposits of $1,341,000. It is an impressive comparison.

Analysis Should Have Been Carried Further.

One can not help but wish, nevertheless, that Mr. Crowley had gone somewhat further in his analysis. One would like to know, for example, how many banks that are not members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation have closed their doors since the first of the year. There were, as I recall, several hundreds of banks that did not join the FDIC. In some cases this was because they were unable to comply with the conditions of admission, in other instances it was because the managers or owners of the institutions were opposed to a guaranty plan and consequently refused to have anything to do with such a scheme.

Obviously until these figures are included in the FDIC report the comparison with 1923-1932 is to a greater or lesser extent inaccurate, and Mr. Crowley is not justified in concluding by implication that the FDIC has put an end to bank failures in this country.

Allowance also should be made for the reduced number of banks in the country today as compared with the number in the '20s. In 1922, for example, we had over 30,000 banks. Through failures, consolidations and voluntary liquidations, the number was reduced until at the end of 1932 there were only 18,000. The FDIC has in its membership less than 14,000.

RFC Has Pumped Huge Sums Into Banking System.

Then again, allowance must be made for the money that has been pumped into our banking system since the first of the year by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Hundreds upon hundreds of millions of RFC funds have been used in this manner, the contributions to the capital structure of banks in January alone amounting to close to $400,000,000. One must assume that this has had some influence in preventing banking troubles.

Perhaps it is impossible for Mr. Crowley to get the facts necessary to make an allowance for all these factors. It would be well, nevertheless, at least to remain sufficiently realistic in his report to recognize their existence. Failure to do so is about like arguing that since we all are alive today it is evident no one ever dies in this country.

Bond Trading Is Slow With Small Losses

High Class Rails Firm; Turnover Mounts to $5,526,000.

New York, June 2 (AP).—Trading in bonds was extremely slow in the week's closing session. High class rail bonds were firm, with gains ranging up to a point in some instances, but speculative rail issues showed a soft trend on small volume. Utilities were fairly steady, while industrials were irregular to slightly lower.

Total transfers were a little larger than a week ago, amounting to $5,526,000, par value, compared with $5,142,000 last Saturday.

The average for 60 domestic corporate issues lost two-tenths of a point at 85.5. This represented a decline of three-tenths of a point from the preceding Saturday.

U. S. Financing Program.

Announcement of the Treasury's financing program for June 15, which will be made public Monday morning, was expected to relieve the market of some of its restraint. Uncertainty over the Treasury's plans has been a depressing influence.

There is only one small maturity of certificates on June 15, and traders remained in the dark about the Government's intentions to raise new cash or to offer an exchange for the called Liberty 4¼s. It seemed doubtful, in some quarters, that the Treasury would raise fresh funds at that time in view of its large cash holdings with banks.

Government issues were generally 3/32ds to 4/32ds lower, with the Home Owners Loan issues and the Treasury 3½s and 3¼s all showing losses of 4/32ds. Transactions here were restricted to about $900,000.

New York Central, Illinois Central, Baltimore & Ohio, Santa Fe, Virginia Railway, Norfolk & Western and Delaware & Hudson were among the railroad issues to show a steady to slightly higher tendency. On the other hand, Rock Island, Chicago & Northwestern, Erie, Northern Pacific and Great Northern issues were slightly lower.

Oil bonds, such as Shell Union, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Humble Oil registered fractional gains. One or two utility issues, including American & Foreign Power 5s and Pennsylvania Power & Light 4½s receded a bit. National Steel and McKesson were among industrials to go lower.

Foreign bonds were irregular and quiet, with the exception of Argentine issues, which scored gains up to 3 points.

Curb Market Closes Week In Dull Session

Final Changes Are Mixed as Transfers Total 66,000 Shares.

New York, June 2 (AP).—The week-end curb trading today was in keeping with the dullness of earlier sessions. Transfers approximated 66,000 shares compared with the record low of 49,000 for the previous Saturday.

Final changes were mixed. A lower trend prevailed during the first hour, but a mild rally lifted prices toward the close and some shares finished with small net gains.

Irregularity embraced utilities, oils and metals. Aluminum Company of America and Pittsburgh Plate Glass dipped about 2 points each while shares off sizable fraction to around a point included Commonwealth & Edison, Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, Humble Oil, Newmont and Schiff Co.

A steady to slightly higher ending was shown by shares of Electric Bond & Share, Greyhound Corporation, Gulf Oil and Lake Shore.

The Dollar Abroad

(Associated Press.)

The dollar was steady in foreign exchange markets today, ruling at levels near Friday's closing prices for foreign currencies in New York. Gold units were strong in the subsequent New York trading.

In London the dollar closed at 5.06⅝ to the pound, compared with 5.06¾ on Friday. The pound sterling lost ⅛ of a cent in New York, selling at $5.06⅛.

The price of gold in London advanced a half penny to 137 shillings 2 pence at a fine ounce (equivalent to $34.75 at the dollar's opening price of 5.06⅝). Bars valued at about $2,072,096 were sold for an unannounced destination.

The dollar eased slightly in Paris, closing at the equivalent of 6.58¾ cents to the franc, compared with Friday's close of 6.58¼ cents. Francs rose .00¼ of a cent in New York to 6.58½ cents, while other gold currencies showed good gains.

Reichsbank Bank Note Coverage Sinks Lower

Berlin, June 2 (AP).—The Reichsbank's bank note coverage was reported today to have dropped to 3.7 per cent compared with 4.6 per cent last week and 7.5 per cent at the end of May, 1933.

The gold and foreign currency reserve suffered a further serious decline of 18,000,000 marks (about $7,200,000) to a net of 135,800,000 marks (about $54,320,000).

Latin American Trade

(United States Department of Commerce.)

Advancing cereal prices and heavy outbound charterings proved stimulating to Argentine business sentiment in May.

Despite a generally difficult commercial situation, Uruguay's foreign trade increased in first quarter of 1934.

The recent slight recession in wholesale demand in Brazil persisted during May, with all branches of textile industry affected.

Increased retail turnover, depletion of stocks, greater liberality in domestic credits, and a freer exchange-control policy combine to stimulate wholesale buying in central Chile.

Reports of agreement in the Leticia controversy with Colombia, in the second half of the month were followed in Peru by a noticeably brighter commercial outlook.

Exchange speculation and a government decree prohibiting certain imports adversely affected Ecuadorian business during May.

Business tension in Colombia was materially relieved by the report of a settlement of the frontier controversy with Peru.

The collection situation in Honduras eased somewhat in May and retail sales advanced.

Seasonal cessation of heavy coffee shipping in Nicaragua has reduced that country's commercial activity.

Uncertainty over possible price changes and the exchange situation have induced a hesitancy in placing new orders in Costa Rica.

Retail sales in Panama declined sharply following the close of the tourist season.

The outlook for business in El Salvador is only fair, in view of recent recession in coffee prices.

The commercial situation and credits in general remain depressed in Bolivia.

Seasonal curtailment of operations in Cuban sugar industry slackened general business activity in May.

Conservatism in commercial buying accompanied the May period of elections in Dominican Republic.

Reports of British government proposals to further restrict imports into British territory results in fewer foreign orders being placed by Jamaican merchants.

Haiti's coffee exports in the first seven months of 1934 were 11 per cent greater in value than last year, although the volume was smaller.

Bank Clearings Fall Lowest During Year

New York, June 2.—On account of the short week and the sharp reduction at New York City, bank clearings have receded to the lowest total in over a year. The aggregate for the five days ended Tuesday, May 29, at all leading cities in the United States, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $3,488,165,000, or a decline of 1.5 per cent from the total for the corresponding 5-day period of 1933. At New York City, clearings were $2,277,907,000, a loss of 10.4 per cent, while the total of $1,210,258,000 for all outside centers, was higher by 20.8 per cent than that of a year ago.

The loss at New York City reflects, to a considerable extent, reduced trading in the securities markets. Last year at this time, the speculative operations, which culminated in the heavy trading during June and July, were well under way. Stock market dealings the past week aggregated 7,000,000 shares, whereas a year ago the total sales were 26,280,000 shares.

Wheat Slumps On Prospect of Drought's Halt

Storms of Stop-Loss Sales Follow Rain Reports; All Grains Drop.

Chicago, June 2 (AP).—Pitching headlong downward, wheat crashed today to 9½ cents a bushel under yesterday's high point, the apex of more than 25 cents almost perpendicular climb.

Indications were that perhaps the drought was ended which for over a month had afflicted millions of acres and with abnormal widespread heat had forced prices aloft.

Storms of stop-loss selling followed news today of rains in Canada, Idaho and Montana, with lower temperatures prevalent and forecasts pointing to extension of moisture relief and possible general break-up of drought.

Extreme Price Tumbles.

Extreme tumbles of prices plunged all deliveries of wheat to $1.00 a bushel or below, carrying the market to nearly the 5 cent limit of loss permitted in any one day. Something of a rally, however, from the bottom figures reached was in progress as dealings came to an end.

Wheat closed flurried, 3 cents to 4⅛ cents below yesterday's finish; corn, 2⅜ to 3⅛ down; oats, 1⅞ to 2¼ off, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 15 cents.

Although confidence of a majority of speculative holders of wheat was badly shaken, venturesome buyers again and again rushed to purchase, and were successful in compelling the market to make transient rallies. These rallies frequently changed blackboard quotations more than a cent a bushel in less than a minute. The buyers in many cases acted on belief that prices were below the true value of the grain as a result of huge damage already done to crops.

Farm Stocks of Wheat.

Much notice was taken of statements today by a leading trade authority that United States farm stocks of wheat had been officially overestimated at least 35,000,000 bushels. He added that Washington suggestions of 250,000,000 bushels domestic carryover of wheat July 1 were likewise out of line, as well as forecasts of domestic requirements.

In view of chances of further shrinkage of production, the statements said it was easily possible that at the end of the next crop year the United States would possess wheat stocks below the margin of National safety.

Unofficial experts on weather were not sanguine that immediate moisture relief would be other than light. They drew attention also to a statement attributed to the Federal farm relief director for the Northwest that a food shortage would result if the drought continued two weeks more.

Corn and oats as well as wheat displayed unusual activity, with price fluctuations governed mainly by the course of wheat.

Provisions gave way with grains.

Trade Failures Drop Lowest Since 1920

New York, June 2.—Dun's Insolvency Index for May has made another drop, going to 59.2, the lowest for any month since September, 1920. In May of that year, Dun's Insolvency Index was 27.5. For each month of 1920, business failures were exceptionally reduced in number until the final quarter of the year, when there was quite an increase, preliminary to the disturbance which culminated in the heavy losses of 1922.

The improvement in the record of business defaults, that has been in progress now since June of last year has been very marked, especially in 1934. In May of last year, Dun's Insolvency Index stood at 113.9 and for that month in the three years preceding, it was very much higher. Even for the five-year average, May, 1925-1929, inclusive, the insolvency index was 104.5.

The last mentioned covers what may be considered a normal record for this period. Yet, the decline so far this year compares quite favorably with that yearly average. For the five months this year, the insolvency index was 68.6, against 135.8 a year ago.

The insolvency index for the past eleven months is compared below for several years, the figures being computed on the basis of the number of commercial insolvencies to each 10,000 firms in business:

Canada Stores Fast Depleting Merchandise

Weather Steps Up Demand; Loadings, Other Indices Point Higher.

New York June 2.—While the continued coolness in Canada has been unfavorable for the movement of some of the summer lines displayed, it is proving an advantage to merchants, who are depleting rapidly their holdings of spring merchandise. Sales of millinery, hosiery, style footwear, women's coats, fur neckwear and men's clothing made one of the best showings for any week since the early part of April, and demand has continued to expand for staple dry goods, dress materials, and cotton goods.

Seasonal sporting goods are topping last year's comparative totals by a larger percentage with each succeeding week, particularly golf, tennis, and camping equipment. Groceries are in better demand, with prices inclined to harden, and the upward trend of grain and livestock prices has done much to develop a feeling of confidence in country districts.

Bank clearings, car loadings, revenue receipts, life insurance sales, and other indices are giving more emphatic demonstration of the solid basis on which the current recovery movement rests, according to dispatches to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., from branch offices located in the chief commercial and industrial centers of the Dominion.

Gains in Refrigerators.

For electric refrigerators, some astonishing gains are being recorded, in spite of the higher prices, which were made necessary by the increased cost of materials and labor. Although some of the manufacturers of refrigerators now are running their plants on twenty-four-hour schedules, they find it difficult to keep up with the present demand.

Sales of hardware and automobile accessories in rural districts are larger, and there is a fairly strong demand for blacksmith supplies and harness. Leather products, furniture, and packing-house products are going into consumption in a steadily-enlarging volume, and sales of radios have picked up considerably during the past month.

Although the gain is not large, there has been some broadening of demand for builders' supplies, as value of building permits issued in 61 Canadian cities during April totaled $2,246,000, against $1,596,000 in April, 1933. For the first four months of 1934, the total reached $4,910,637, an increase of 5.3 per cent over the corresponding 1933 total.

Paper Orders Increase.

Orders to wholesale paper houses are becoming more numerous, and many of the big distributors are doing a better business than at any time since 1929. From practically all consuming sources, there is a healthy demand for fine papers, and there is a better tone to the coarse paper market.

Book papers are selling well, together with off-set lines and cover paper. Although the printing industry, as a whole, is dull, a few of the larger shops and lithographing plants are fairly busy.

In spite of the slight recession during the last two weeks, the output of automobiles continues one of the outstanding features of the industrial situation. Stimulated by the expansion in both domestic and export demand, production now is at the highest level since 1931, with the comparative figures of 1933 exceeded by more than 120 per cent.

Production of Steel.

Production of steel ingots and castings also is around the level set down for the early months of 1931, but the output of pig iron is not matching this percentage of gain, even though above the 1933 figures for the same period.

Activity in textile mills is being well maintained, with the manufacture of woolen yarn and cloth now the most active branch of the industry.

The manufacture of boots and shoes has shown more than the usual seasonal increase since the end of the first quarter, and there has been a sharp gain in the output of rubber products, particularly automobile tires. The output of newsprint mills is ranging 30 to 40 per cent larger than a year ago, with sales practically on a par with production.

Lumber Cut Largest.

The winter cut of lumber was on the largest scale known in many years, but operations in woods have been declining gradually since the early part of May.

Canada's favorable trade balance for the first four months of 1934 is nearly double that for the same period last year, with commerce with the British Empire countries showing a larger percentage of gain than that with the United States. Exports of newsprint in April totaled 3,140,519 hundredweight, valued at $5,319,708, a substantial increase over the 2,262,774 hundredweight, with a value of $4,535,747, exported in the corresponding month of 1933.

The United States was the largest purchaser of newsprint, buying 2,811,742 hundredweight for $4,284,588. The export of the manufactures of rubber in March, which amounted to $1,294,259, was a large increase over the export of $758,639 of February, and over the $685,821 exported in March, 1933. The main item was pneumatic casings, which went to 67 countries and groups of countries.

Steel Industry Pay Rolls Advance $4,208,508

New York, June 2 (AP).—The American Iron and Steel Institute announced today that pay rolls in the steel industry were larger by $4,208,508 during April than in the preceding month, and employment increased by 11,809.

Wages and salaries increased during the month to $45,471,878, of which $36,778,026 went to wage earners, and reflected the general 10 per cent increase which was granted on April 1.

Employment rose to a total of 431,086, of which number 392,069 were wage earners.

Southeastern Baccalaureate Sermon Today

U. S. Tariff Commission Chairman to Speak at Graduation.

The baccalaureate sermon for candidates for graduation of Southeastern University, will be preached at Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian Church, New Hampshire avenue and Randolph street, today at 11 a. m. by the pastor of the church, the Rev. C. E. Hawthorne.

The prospective graduates will meet at the church in caps and gowns at 10:30 a. m. and immediately after the services will be photographed for the class picture.

Robert L. O'Brien, chairman of the U. S. Tariff Commission, will deliver the address at the annual commencement ceremony Tuesday at 8 p. m. in Memorial Continental Hall. Degrees will be conferred on graduates of the Schools of Accountancy and Law and numerous scholastic honors will be awarded.

The graduating classes were guests of the Alumni Association Friday night at a reception and dance in the Admiral Hotel. New officers of the association, headed by Don Hyland, were installed.

The Woodward School commencement will be held next Friday in the Y. M. C. A. assembly hall.

Students of the Washington Preparatory School made a tour of historic points in Maryland, West Virginia and Virginia last week-end, visiting Monocacy and Antietam battlefields, Frederick, Hagerstown, Charles Town, Harpers Ferry, Leesburg and other towns and places of interest. The group was headed by Dr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Maiden. The school's commencement will be held June 18 Summer classes in law and accountancy began last Friday and will continue through this month.

N. U. Yearbook Is Dedicated

Charles Sherrod Hatfield Tendered Honor by Graduates.

Justice Charles Sherrod Hatfield, of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, is the recipient of honors this year in the dedication of the National University Docket, yearbook, to him.

Each year the Docket is dedicated to an outstanding figure in the legal world who has had close connection with the law school. Justice Hatfield has been professor of Federal procedure and the law of agency at National for many years, during which time he has won the affection of the students in his classes.

The Docket was issued during the past week and proved to be a unique volume. A wealth of research was revealed in its pages, which traced the development of English and American court procedure from early English history to the near future in the dedication of the new Supreme Court Building. The book contains photographs of the faculty and members of this year's graduating class, who are to receive their degrees at the annual commencement June 13.

While plans for the end of the current year are being completed, the Omicron Chapter of Kappa Beta Pi, international legal sorority, is anticipating the coming year by offering an annual scholarship at National University School of Law.

Cathedral School Services Planned

The annual baccalaureate service for the graduating class of the National Cathedral School will be held in the Great Choir of Washington Cathedral tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock with the Bishop of Washington, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., delivering the address. Special music will be rendered by the girls in the school choir. The procession, which will form in front of the Phoebe A. Hearst Building at 3:30, will include not only members of the graduating class but the entire student body, the faculty and a large representation of alumnae.

The commencement program of the National Cathedral School will continue Monday with Flag Day exercises at Beauvoir House at 4:30 p. m., when the address will be delivered by Maj. Gen. Robert U. Patterson, Surgeon General of the United States Army. Diplomas will be presented to the graduating class in the Great Choir on Tuesday at 10:30 a. m. by Bishop Freeman. The address will be delivered by the Right Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York.

Bishop Will Participate In Graduation Exercises

Sidney W. Russell Named President by Pupils of Journalistic Fraternity at Catholic University.

The Most Rev. James H. Ryan, Bishop of Modra and rector of the Catholic University, will participate in graduation activities of two local colleges this week. He will travel to Baltimore on Thursday and Pittsburgh on Sunday to deliver talks to seniors. Tomorrow he will give the commencement address to graduates of Immaculata Seminary in Washington, and on Tuesday he will attend the graduation exercises of Trinity College. In Baltimore he will give the address to the graduates of Mount St. Agnes College. In Pittsburgh, he will deliver the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of 1934 at Duquesne University, his own Alma Mater.

Sidney W. Russell, of Washington, has been unanimously elected president of the Catholic University chapter of Pi Delta Epsilon, National honorary journalistic fraternity, to succeed Henry I. Begnal, of Waterbury, Conn., retiring president. He has been active in campus journalism, serving on the staff of the Tower, student newspaper, for three years, and now occupying the office of managing editor. He also is sports editor of the Cardinal of 1935, class yearbook. Felix R. Sherry, of Mahanoy City, Pa., was named to the post of vice president, and William J. McKinstry, of Bristol, Conn., was designated secretary-treasurer.

The Pi Delta Epsilon elections followed induction of new members to the fraternity. Ceremonies of initiation were read by Begnal. The new members are Joseph A. Cicala, of West Haven, Conn.; H. Charles Fanjul, of Havana, Cuba; Ambrose M. Hasse, of Troy, N. Y.; Henry C. Kessler, of York, Pa.; Daniel E. Lawler, of Syracuse, N. Y., and John M. Wigglesworth, of Washington and Worcester, Mass.

The Catholic University Glee Club elected William J. McKinstry, of Bristol, Conn., as club president, to succeed Joseph A. Cicala, of West Haven, Conn., in annual elections held this week. A Washington resident, George W. Mattingly, was chosen vice president. Sidney W. Russell, another Washington student, was designated business manager, and James Seng, of Chicago, Ill., was named secretary. George L. Rolling, of Little Falls, was unanimously elected librarian.

The final examination period which opened on Thursday will end on Wednesday of this week, bringing to a close the academic year of 1933 and 1934. Final tests in all departments, schools and colleges of the university will be completed and preparations placed under way for the opening of the summer session on Friday, June 29. Commencement week for the graduates of the class of 1934, led by Daniel S. Sullivan, of Baltimore, Md., and Matthew Sweeney, of Pearl River, N. Y., general committee chairman, will open on Friday with the induction of the class of 1934 into the ranks of the alumni. Commencement exercises will take place on Wednesday, June 13, when degrees will be awarded by his excellency, the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore and chancellor of the Catholic University.

Alfred McK. Ellerby, of Denver, Colo., was elected president of the Harlequins, student dramatic association, at the annual election this week. He succeeds another Denver youth, John H. McDonald. The new vice president of the organization is Bernard J. Hart, of Little Falls, N. Y. Joseph A. Spitzig, of Lakewood, Ohio, was named secretary-treasurer. The business committee for the year will include Joseph Angers, of Springfield, Mass.; James Gartland, of New Haven, Conn., and John Thralls, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

500 Students At Catholic U. To Get Degree

June 13 Graduation Rites to Include Many New Alumni Features.

The program for the forty-fifth commencement of the Catholic University, and plans for commencement and alumni week have just been announced by the Most Rev. James H. Ryan, Bishop of Modra and rector of the university.

The graduation exercises will be held on June 13 in the university gymnasium, when more than 500 degrees will be granted to students who have completed their work in the undergraduate and graduate schools of the university. His excellency the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore and chancellor of the university, will preside at the exercises and in the name of the trustees will confer the several degrees.

The commencement address will be delivered by Dr. Karl F. Herzfeld, internationally known physicist and professor of physic at Johns Hopkins University. Dr. Herzfeld has had a distinguished career in his field, and has taught at the universities of Vienna, Munich and Michigan. He is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a fellow of the American Physical Society and a member of German Physical and German Bunsen Societies. Although a member of the staff of Johns Hopkins only since 1926, he has already brought distinction to that institution.

Martin to Deliver Valedictory.

The valedictory will be delivered by Clarence Martin, jr., of Martinsburg, W. Va., son of the former president of the American Bar Association. Mr. Martin, senior, who is a member of the Board of Trustees, an alumnus of the University and president of the National Alumni Association, received a law degree in 1901, and he will witness this year the conferring of the LL.B. degree upon his son. Another father who will see his son, who also bears his name, receive a degree, is Vincent L. Toomey, prominent Washington attorney and lecturer in the School of Law, who himself received a degree from the Catholic University.

Featured this year for the first time as a part of the commencement program will be a series of events known as "alumni week." The Catholic University has worked out a program covering several years to come, which is designed to bring the alumni closer to university life. This June the returning clerical alumni are to be housed in Caldwell Hall, while the lay alumni will be assigned quarters in Graduate Hall. Committees composed of men from the Washington chapter of the National Alumni Association have been appointed to work in the alumni office of the university to entertain these visitors and to introduce them again to the university.

Luncheons, Dance and Smoker.

Decennial luncheons will be held in the main dining hall of the university after the graduation exercises, at which the classes of 1894, 1904, 1914 and 1924 will be particularly honored. The program also includes an alumni dance and a smoker at the Columbia Country Club. At the latter event, seniors will be the guests of the alumni and will be formally inducted into membership in the national association.

An alumni luncheon and a tour to Mount Vernon over the new Memorial highway, which is new to all but the most recent graduates, and a ball game between the alumni and the seniors are other features designed to rearouse the interest of the old grads. The alumni council also will meet the day before commencement to make plans for the ensuing year, with Dr. Clarence E. Martin, the president of the association, presiding.

Harold Golder Is Named A. U. Graduate Dean

Chancellor Gray Reveals Expanded Schedule of Courses.

Appointment of Dr. Harold Golder as dean of the American University Graduate School and a reorganized and expanded schedule of graduate courses for next year were announced by Chancellor Joseph M. M. Gray yesterday.

The joint announcement was made at a banquet sponsored by the University Alumni Association at the Mayflower Hotel. More than 250 guests, including members of the board of trustees, Women's Guild, faculty, alumni, and friends, were present.

Dr. Golder, who will succeed Dr. Lucius C. Clark, is a graduate of Carleton College and holds the degrees of master of arts and doctor of philosophy from Harvard University. He is the author of several articles on matters of literary scholarship. Before coming to the American University, where he has been a member of the English department for seven years, Dr. Golder served on the faculties of Lawrence College and Indiana University.

Introduction of a program of courses leading to advanced degrees in English and expansion in the social sciences were emphasized by Chancellor Gray. He called attention to the fact that the American University is one of 23 institutions in the United States whose work for the doctorate in political science is approved by the American Council on Education. A university committee on graduate studies, including Dr. Charles C. Tansil, Dr. Delos O. Kinsman and Dr. Oswald Schreiner, will direct the new schedule.

Dr. Gray also announced election of six new members to the board of trustees. The new members are Lewis G. Alderman, Charles E. Allinger, of Detroit, Mich; Howard C. Baldwin of Detroit, Fred Brown of Detroit, the Rev. Ivan Lee Holt of St. Louis, Mo., and Bishop Frank A. Smith of Houston, Tex

The board also elected Dr. Clark, former chancellor of the university and dean of the Graduate School, chancellor emeritus.

Arthur Fleming, president of the Alumni Association, announced the election of the following members to the board of directors: Dr. Harold F. Cofferman, Dr. Edson L. Whitney, Anne King and Richard Jarvis.

G. W. U. Honors Secretary Hull On Wednesday

Two University Heads Also Will Be Given Degrees.

Conferring of honorary degrees upon the Secretary of State of the United States, and upon two university presidents, will mark the 113th commencement of the George Washington University on Wednesday, June 6.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull will receive the degree of Doctor of Laws in recognition of his contributions to world accord and to friendship and understanding between the nations of the Americas. This action is regarded as one particularly appropriate on the part of the George Washington University in view of the work of its School of Government and of its Center of Inter-American Studies.

The other recipients of honorary degrees, President Arthur Cutts Willard of the University of Illinois, and President John Lloyd Newcomb of the University of Virginia, both are members of the engineering profession who have attained distinction as university administrators.

Dr. Willard Formerly Here.

Dr. Willard is a native of Washington and a former member of the faculty of the George Washington University where he taught in the School of Engineering. After graduating from Central High School here, he studied at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, graduating with a degree in Chemical Engineering. He has been at the University of Illinois since 1913 as a member of the faculty and head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering. He was elected president of the University of Illinois last fall.

Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb has been on the faculty of the University of Virginia since 1905, and president since 1931. A graduate of William and Mary College and of the University of Virginia, he is widely known as a consulting engineer.

About 700 to Graduate.

The commencement exercises will be held at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening in Constitution Hall. Degrees and certificates will be conferred upon some 700 graduates of the various schools of the University, including the Junior College, Columbian College, the Graduate Council, the School of Medicine, the Law School, the School of Engineering, the School of Pharmacy, the School of Education, the School of Government, the Division of Library Science and the Division of Fine Arts.

Senior week festivities opened last night with the reception and ball in honor of the graduates given by the General Alumni Association of the University at the Mayflower.

Today at 4 p. m. baccalaureate services will be held at All Souls' Church, Sixteenth and Harvard streets. The Rev. Dr. Allen Stockdale, minister of the First Congregational Church, will preach the sermon.

President and Mrs. Cloyd H. Marvin will hold a reception for the graduates and their parents at the Washington Club Monday, from 4 to 7 p. m.

Class night exercises will take place Tuesday evening in the University yard.

Public Affairs School Ready At American U.

U. S. Emergency Agencies to Be Examined This Summer.

Plans have been completed for the inauguration of the American University's new School of Public Affairs, according to an announcement by Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, chancellor of the university.

The first session will be held from June 25 to August 17 and will be conducted as an Institute for the Study of the Emergency Agencies of the Government. Dr. Arnold Bennett Hall, director of the Institute of Government Research of the Brookings Institution, will serve as advisory counsel for the summer session, and Dr. G. A. Graham, of the Princeton School of Public and International Affairs, will serve as visiting dean. Arthur S. Fleming, executive director of the United States Society, will act as director for the session.

Establishment of the School of Public Affairs was announced at the inauguration of Dr. Gray as chancellor of the university on March 3. At that time President Roosevelt, who delivered the principal address at the inaugural ceremonies, stated that he was "especially happy in the announcement of the establishment of this School of Public Affairs."

"I can assure you," the President continued, "of the hearty cooperation of the Administration in all of its branches."

Visitors to Help.

The administrative officials of the school will be assisted by five visiting professors, all of them experts in the field of the social sciences. The work of the institute will emphasize the broad problems of government underlying all the emergency agencies. Primary emphasis will be placed on round table discussions to be participated in by governmental administrators, legislators, members of the various governmental advisory boards, and other outstanding men in public life who may not, at the present time, be actually engaged in governmental activities.

In addition to these round table discussions the work of the institute will be so organized that students will have every possible opportunity to actually see the Government in action.

"The sole purpose of the institute," according to Chancellor Gray, "is to provide the Nation with a laboratory for the social sciences, available to students of government everywhere, and conducted under the best possible auspices."

Courses Open to Many.

Junior and seniors enrolled in accredited institutions of higher learning and majoring in the social sciences; graduate students in the same field; social science instructors in both high schools and colleges, and persons not actively engaged in academic work but desirous of enlarging their fund of information on current developments, and who have pursued a certain amount of work in the social sciences, have been invited to participate in the institute's program. It is possible for students to earn six semester hours' credit as a result of the eight weeks' work.

The institute's activities will center on the 80-acre campus of the American University, where boarding accommodations will be provided for out-of-town students. The university's downtown buildings will, however, also be used in connection with the summer activities.

James R. LeFevre Valedictory Choice

Paul J. Leverone, principal of Columbia "Tech" Schools, announces James R. LeFevre has been selected as valedictorian for the 1934 graduating classes.

Graduation exercises for the engineering, drafting, aviation, radio and building construction classes of the Columbia Schools will be held June 21, in the Washington Hotel. The exercises will begin at 6:30 p. m. with a banquet for graduates and guests. Graduation exercises will start at 8:30 p. m. in the Spanish gardens, and will be followed by the graduation dance in the hall of nations.

Invitations may be obtained at the school office, 1319 F street northwest.

American U. Changes Absent Rules for Students Above B

High-Mark Pupils Can Use Own Judgment On Attendance.

Students who have earned an average grade of B at the American University this semester will not be required to attend classes in which they are registered during the fall term next year, according to a ruling on absences recently approved by the faculty. The new regulation, which supersedes the ironclad "no cut" system of the past year, makes class attendance during any given semester entirely optional with students who have maintained a B average during the preceding period.

Students who are in their first term of residence at American University or who have made less than a B average during the preceding semester will be responsible for making up all work which they miss through absences under the new regulation.

Subsidies to athletes are not necessary to the success of a liberal arts college, in the opinion of a large majority of American University students, a questionnaire reveals.

The students were overwhelmingly in favor of continuing social fraternities and sororities on the campus. Ninety per cent indicated their belief that the colleges in the United States are not turning out more graduates than the country needs.

Two additions to the instructional staff at the American University have been announced by Dr. George B. Woods, dean of the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Almon R. Wright will be instructor in history, and Paul Smith will be a teaching fellow in English.

Dr. Wright received his Ph. B. degree at Denison, M. A. at Harvard, and Ph. D. at Illinois. Mr. Smith is a graduate of Dickinson College.

Author Credits U. S. Greatness To Laborers

Louis Adamic Says We're Paying for Denying Workers' Respect.

New York, June 2 (AP).—Men who work with their hands—the miners, farmers, steel workers, lumberjacks and carpenters—have a new champion for their cause in Louis Adamic, the author.

"Manual labor," Adamic said, "should get more credit for the part it has had in the building of the Nation. Lack of respect for these people, too, has created one of the most vital problems the United States faces in connection with its foreign-born residents and their children."

Adamic was a "hobo," a sailor and a laborer before he began to write, and the problems of the foreign-born are close to his heart—because he is one of them.

Came Here at 14.

He came to New York as a lad of 14 from his native Yugoslavia, joined the Army three years later and fought in the World War. After several years as a "bum wandering the country over" he settled in San Pedro, Calif.

The plight of the foreign born today, he believes, is made sharply critical by the inarticulate older folk unable to explain to their children the beauty of their racial backgrounds and cultures.

"The children," he said, "don't respect their parents, some of them 'hunkies' like me, if you please, because they work with their hands. Everybody wants a penthouse, a chauffeur, lots of money and a white collar job.

25 Millions of Them.

"These second generation foreigners, there are 25,000,000 of them, are an important new element in the United States, and one that few of us are aware of.

"If these children could know of their racial and cultural backgrounds, realize that the manual labor their parents have done has been vital to the country, I believe they would lose their feeling of inferiority.

"This manifests itself variously. Some become patriotic, only their patriotism is mere lip-service, without basis in conviction or feeling. Not a few turn their feeling of inferiority inside out and get tough and loud; in some cases antisocial.

"Those who do know of their rich backgrounds feel good. Now they are proud. The others are dangling in the air. That so many of them are criminals is an American development. There is little crime, usually, in their own countries.

What Today Means

"Gemini."

If June 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 4:45 to 6:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:45 to 9:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 6:45 to 8:45 p. m.

Sunday, June 3, will probably prove to be far from monotonous. You had best be prepared for many pleasant interruptions. If you indulge in automobiling it may prove advisable to not allow anyone else, nor yourself, to yield even momentarily to the temptation to exceed the speed limit, as there are chances of accidents occurring through recklessness. Caution must be exercised in any form of water sports. Married couples, or those engaged, will do well to avoid any form of personal criticism, especially in front of other people. Care should be used in the selection of foods or dining places if not eating in your own home.

If a woman and June 3 is your natal day, you possess a remarkable amount of intuition, and if you will be guided by it many serious mistakes may be avoided. You grasp information and facts so quickly that many times only a superficial amount of knowledge is gained regarding a subject. It might be advisable to get into the habit of delving deeper, and applying yourself more to the investigation of the basic or fundamental facts of any matter which you expect to express an opinion on. If you will regard love as a serious matter, and one to be cherished, it may prove to be your greatest joy and comfort.

The child born on June 3, when it arrives at the school age, must be taught the art of studying. Being quick witted and able to learn very quickly, children born on this date, may, if not watched, get into the habit of "skimming" through their school work. Impress on it that anything worth doing should be done in a thorough manner. This child will in all probability have a decided flair for mathematics, history, and English composition, and if taught to concentrate in studying, will do remarkably well.

The man born on June 3 needs only to cultivate the virtue of patience to prosper. An unusually alert mind, which can visualize important steps to be taken long before others recognize their necessity, he makes an ideal opportunist. If this is your birthday, rejoice in the knowledge that if you put your heart and soul in your work, your efforts should bring well merited recognition and reward. Home life may enable you to arrive at a greater degree of success than batchelorhood. It might be wise to curb any tendency toward an unreasonable amount of self-praise; let your friends do that for you.

June 3 is a day that requires only a determination for self-control and good nature to be practiced to have satisfying results.

'At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

F. L. Congress' analysis of the end-position in the first game of the current world titular match continues to hold the interest of readers. From Frederick R. Chevalier, chess editor of the Christian Science Monitor, comes the following:

"Naturally I am already aware of the inaccuracy of the note to the first Alkehine-Bogoljubow game, and after a rather prolonged analysis of the final position I have come to the conclusion that with the best play black should draw. Instinctively I feel white should win, but when it comes to actual analysis I have been unable to demonstrate, except in the variation which Mr. Congress gives as drawing! In his variation he plays for white 74 P-Kt6; K-Kt7, it seems to me, wins. Also a move later, when Mr. Congress plays 75 P-Kt7, still 75 K-Kt7 wins. This variation, however, is materially aided by forcing the white K to B6. If instead of 69 . . . R-R4ch, black plays 69 . . . R-R6, for all I can discover he draws.

"The British Chess Magazine expresses the opinion that advancing the RP wins. Here is a variation I worked out that ends in a draw. I do not see how to improve white's play. 66 R-QKt8, P-Kt 7; 67 P-R4, K-B7; 68 K-Kt4, P-Kt8 (Q); 69 RxQ, KxR; 70 P-R5, K-B7; 71 P-R6, K-Q6; 72 K-Kt5, K-K5; 73 P-K7, R-R4ch, &c.

"I am afraid we are all blaming Bogoljubow for not trying this method of winning, even if it does not actually win. But the facts of the case exonerate him. It seems that when Bogoljubow made his 65 R-B8ch, and Alekhine replied K-Q6, the umpire or referee claimed the game was drawn because the same position was repeated three times. This is not so, and Bogoljubow, who was very short of time, at once complained, and set about moving the pieces beginning R-QKt8 to demonstrate that he could win. Apparently this fact, the moving of pieces by Bogoljubow, really forfeited his right to continue the game, and the only solution was to abandon the game on the spot."

For the benefit of those who have missed the preceding issues, the position, with Bogoljubow's (white) turn to move, was as followed when declared drawn; White: K on KB3; R on QB8; P on KB4, KKt3, and KR3. Black: K on Q6; R on QR7; P on QKt6.

John Roberts writes, "I can not refrain from commenting on a singular coincidence in the two supposed drawing variations which have been presented in The Post. As I pointed out last week the flaw in Mr. Congress' analysis occurred in 74 P-Kt6, in place of which a K move would result in a win. Imagine my surprise on playing over Mr. Helms' 'type continuation' to find precisely the same misapprehension in his 75 P-Kt6, leading to a draw. If, instead, white plays 75 K-Kt7, there follows an easy win. Apparently all one has to do to bring about a draw in this famous ending is to play P-Kt6 at the wrong time!"

I. Wainberg writes from Newark, N. J., "Will you publish this in your fine column to show that F. L. Congress is quite correct and Newark editor and Chess Bulletin all wrong? The Newark Evening News commented on the first game: 'It is incomprehensible how Bogoljubow could have blundered to the extent of agreeing to draw, or, rather, not seeing a fairly simple win in the position and going in for it on his fifty-fifth move. Grand masters on chess play are not supposed to overlook such things.' What things? Such ignorant, superficial editors who copy 100 per cent incorrect stuff should be barred."

Hermann Helms, chess editor of the American Chess Bulletin and Brooklyn Daily Eagle, comments further, "The game in question reached New York by a fast steamer and was given to the press at once. If I am not greatly mistaken, the responsibility for starting on its rounds the statement that Bogoljubow should, or at any rate might have played on for a win, falls on me. That was my judgment at the time and I have not changed it since, although I found more in the position subsequently than I realized at the time. The analysis in the Bulletin might well have been more comprehensive, but it was press time and haste was essential.

"Mr. Congress speaks of a certain unanimity of opinion in the American and European press, but I do not find it so. Somewhat impatiently I have been awaiting expressions of opinion from abroad. Very conservatively, the British Chess Magazine says: 'He could hardly lose and might win.' Definitely in favor of a draw as the proper outcome is the new magazine, Schach-Hochschule, which is on record as follows: 'Kmoch (Alekhine's second) believed that the win could be forced through the medium of the rook's pawn. But Dr. Alekhine at once demonstrated the way to draw. We shall use it as an end-game study in our next number.'"

The position in question has certainly served to focus world-wide attention upon the match, which in other respects is proving a runaway for the champion. The adjourned position of the 19th game is reported as a likely draw, hence Alekhine leads by a score of 6 wins, 1 loss and 11 draws. We understand play is to continue until Alekhine runs his point score to 15, provided Bogoljubow does not tie it up in the meantime, and he needs but 4½ points to do so.

The Capital City Chess Club has invited the Ladies' Chess Club, the Queens, to an encounter in match play on Wednesday evening, June 6. The Ladies' have accepted and will present a team consisting of Miss C. Hallett, Miss Maud Sewell, Mrs. E. R. Shepard, C. Wild, E. J. Jeffers, A. W. Jones, H. B. Richardson, Charlotte Story and Dr. Kittridge. Play will take place at the quarters of the Capital City Club, 917 Fifteenth street northwest. The public is invited to witness the play, with a special invitation extended to all feminine fans.

Fifteen local players recently participated in a group of rapid transit tournaments held in connection with an evening of entertainment at the residence of Robert W. Buzzard, Chevy Chase, Md. Winners at the "10-second" style tourneys were Willis J. Nolan, R. W. Buzzard and W. H. Mutchler. The summaries of the scores in each of the three groups are appended.

Group 1. W. J. Nolan, 5-0; F. W. Schwab, 3-2; J. H. Wilson, 3-2; F. E. Chase, 1-4, and C. H. Irwin, 1-4.

Group 2. R. W. Buzzard, 4-0; G. Macpherson, 3-1; H. B. Gardner, 2-2; H. Bennett, 1-3, and G. P. Walton, 0-4.

Group 3. W. H. Mutchler, 3-0; F. E. Kunkel, 1½-1½ H. C. Vacher, 1½-1½, and L. J. Waldron, 0-3.

The key to No. 578, three-mover by local composer W. B. Mundelle, is B-K7. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, Fred T. Hafelfinger, Willis J. Nolan, H. E. Evans and Frederick R. Chevalier. Solvers' comments will be given next Sunday, and for this week they are granted a rest.

TO MEN WANTING PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT
At Good Wages

Large money returns in every cycle of America's magic industrial growth has been made by those courageous enough and fortunate enough to get in early on the "new" principle or commodity—whether in the production, distribution or service end.

Air conditioning and sanitation are foremost in public thought today. Men are flocking to ventures which have the commercial advantage of this appeal, like they did to the ideal of steam transportation, the motor-driven vehicle, the telephone, the victrola, the radio, television and other revolutionary innovations that have come to be regarded now as standard necessities. Our adaptation of the NEW PRINCIPLE to every-day need is having a universal acceptation wherever shown.

There will be a showing of a simple working model of this wonderful facility to men of mechanical inclination who are anxious to get into a new line of business for themselves with larger earnings than their former trades ever provided.

Men from such trades as CARPENTERS, BRICKLAYERS, STRUCTURAL STEEL, INSURANCE, BREAD AND MILK ROUTES AND ANY STANDARD BUSINESS will be interested.

Showing at Blue Room of Hamilton Hotel 9:15 tomorrow (Monday) morning, June 4. Such men must be available for IMMEDIATE EMPLOYMENT if convinced of their opportunity at this interview.

They must be able to give good references; to go into this business "for keeps" and grow with it into the large earnings it affords. Men selected must be of average ability, of good physique, courageous spirit and plenty of common sense; must be willing to work hard. Come promptly at hour specified as DOORS WILL BE CLOSED AT THAT TIME. The showing and interview will require about TWO HOURS. SPECIALTY SALESMEN NEED NOT APPLY.

Law Seniors Plan Painting As School Gift

Portrait of Prof. Roach Will Be Presented to Georgetown.

The senior classes of Georgetown University School of Law will present a bust portrait in oil of Prof. Charles E. Roach as their graduation gift to the law school. One of the veteran members of the faculty, Prof. Roach has taught classes at Georgetown for the last 28 years.

The presentation will be made at the annual class night exercises of the law school on June 9, the program for which was announced yesterday. The portrait of Prof. Roach will be hung in one of the corridors where portraits of deceased and present members of the faculty are displayed.

Prof. Roach is a full-time member of the faculty. In recent years he has been teaching conflict of laws, sales and domestic relations. He is a graduate of Georgetown.

C. Keefe Hurley, president of the afternoon section of the senior class, will make the presentation of the portrait at the class night exercises, to which alumni of the school are invited. Dean George E. Hamilton will make the speech of acceptance on behalf of the faculty.

At the exercises, starting at 8 p. m., J. Jennings Boland, president of the morning section, will preside. The bachelor's oration will be delivered by John F. O'Donnell. There will be two class histories, the one for the morning section by James I. Murphy, and for the afternoon section by Harold N. Platt. Class prophecies will be given for the morning section by Harry L. Ryan, jr., and for the afternoon section by Harold W. Sheehan.

Vincent G. Panati was elected by the graduating classes to deliver the valedictory. The concluding address will be made by the Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S. J., regent of the school.

Thomas J. Hurney, registrar of the law school and secretary of the temporary alumni body recently organized, will make an announcement in a few days of plans for the law alumni meeting to be held the evening of June 8. Dean Hamilton is the chairman of the alumni. It was expected that several hundred alumni would attend this meeting and form a permanent and active law school association in the District of Columbia.

The junior class in military science, comprising R. O. T. C. cadets, will attend the summer training camp at Fort George G. Meade, Md., for six weeks beginning June 15. This is required for a commission in the Organized Reserves.

Famous Craft Carries Mail

Steamer Starr to Run Her Mileage Close to 750,000.

Seward, Alaska, June 2 (AP).—The famous steamer Starr, visitor to the northland's most isolated coast regions, is back in familiar waters, ready to carry the mail again on one of the world's oldest routes, and which will bring her log close to three-quarters of a million miles.

For 14 years the Starr has transported mail, food, building materials, merchandise and passengers out of here to such points as Kodiak, Uginak, Uyak, Unga, Squaw Harbor, False Pass, Sanak and Scotch Gap, where a lighthouse guides mariners to the entrance of Unimak Pass, far out near the tip of the Aleutian Islands, and then to Unalaska and finally to Dillingham, in Bristol Bay.

The year around she operates out of Seward to the Aleutian Chain. In summer months, when there are no ice blockades, she goes up into Bristol Bay, and during the winter she plows along the southern coast of the Aleutians in seas deserted except for an occasional fishing boat.

Her schedule calls for sailings from here once a month, with two trips a year to Seattle for overhaulings.

Due to the lateness of the awarding of a new mail contract recently, however, she will receive her first going-over this season when she returns South the last of August. With completion of the canning season, the Starr is the only means of getting in and out of the islands of the Aleutian chain.

In her 14 years as a mail boat, the Starr has logged 560,000 miles on a route known as one of the stormiest in the world, and the new contract will enable her to increase her mileage by almost half as much more.

The little vessel is commanded by Capt. Arthur Ryning, who took over the ship three years ago after years in northern waters in the service of the Alaska Steamship Co.

She carries a crew of 21 and has accommodations for 30 first class and 30 steerage passengers, although measuring but 110 feet over all. She was built in 1909, originally intended for halibut fishing, but later was lengthened for her present duties.

The new construction will carry out Japan's policy of covering the whole of Manchukuo with a network of commercial and military railroads.

PLANS are complete for a memorial service at Harding Hall, Government Printing Office, Tuesday night, in honor of Tom Flaherty, who was secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerk for nearly 20 years. Local No. 140 is sponsoring the services, which will include an address by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and choral numbers by the G. P. O. chorus under direction of Gerald Whelan.

Taken suddenly ill while inspecting the Marine Corps Reserve Aviation Units in Detroit, Mich., Maj. M. R. Thacher, U. S. M. C. Headquarters, was rushed last week to Naval Hospital here. He is now recovering from a mild attack of pleuro-pneumonia.

Walter Martin Promoted

Appointment of Walter S. Martin as assistant superintendent of the Railway Mail Service by Postmaster General James A. Farley is applauded in postal circles. This promotion is an evident recognition of long and efficient service in the department, for Mr. Martin has been engaged in postal work for nearly 44 years.

Mr. Martin started his career as a clerk in the Staunton, Va., postoffice, where he worked three years. Then, in 1883, he entered the Railway Mail Service, in which he remained—going up through the various grades—until 1902. In that year he was appointed chief clerk, and in 1917 he became assistant superintendent of the third division, which position he held until this year.

Once had a most sinister snere.
When he sneered, his mouth
Went from North to South,
And wound up behind his ere.

There was a young man from Duluth
Whose manners were very uncuth.

Since he's only three,
It must be because of his yuth."

SIX methods or devices of value to American science and industry were patented last week by Government employes in Washington.

S. O. Claytor, Navy, is the inventor of a powder mixer to be used with tooth powder, being adapted to spread the powder over the tooth brush.

A process for fireproofing cellulosic materials is the brain child of Martin Leatherman (*), Agriculture. His process is designed for use on such fabrics as unbleached cotton by treating them with sodium stannate, then with an aqueous solution of ferric sulphate, and finally with chlorinated rubber.

Charles H. Deerwester, War, has perfected a sectional multiple indicator with a common dial and multiple pointers for installation on aircraft having multiple engines.

Taking pictures of objects in particularly inaccessible places is expected to be facilitated by a portable photographic apparatus just patented by Byron McCandless, Navy. It is to be used in photographing portions of machinery, engineering work and the pages of rare books in libraries.

A method and apparatus for measuring the modulation of a modulated radio frequency wave has been perfected by James D. Wallace, Naval Research Laboratory.

George A. Graham, War, is the inventor of a control for printing telegraph machines, so that operation is assured at all times, irrespective of whether the local or the distant transmitting contacts of the machine are open or closed.

The Federal Society of Translators will meet tomorrow night at the Y. W. C. A. Building, Seventeenth and K streets northwest, at 8 o'clock, Ignatius Jawney, Translating Bureau, State Department, secretary of the society, announces. All linguists in Government service are invited to attend.

Euphrates Valley Is Fixed as Origin Of Byzantine Art

Beirut, Syria, June 2 (AP).—Byzantine art history has been revised by the Yale University Archeological Expedition, and its origins have been placed in the Euphrates Valley, land of the Bible. Discoveries at the Dura Europa excavations are asserted to have overthrown accepted ideas.

The prevailing view was that Byzantine art, whose glorious examples have inspired architects throughout the ages, had its beginning in Constantinople late in the third, or early in the fourth century.

Inscriptions and ornaments dug up at Dura, however, place its origins at least 150 years earlier, says Dr. Clark Hopkins, the expedition's field director. They also show its principal forms are from Mesopotamian or other Asiatic sources, and not Egyptian.

The expedition's work fully confirms the view held by some authorities that the East played the major part in the transformation of architecture which led up to the middle ages. While the structural system was largely Roman, building in brick, the erection of domes, principal characteristics of Byzantine art, the incrusting of surfaces with marble and gilt, were all Eastern inventions.

The Current Stage Reveals Purling Idyl of the Love Life of a Gob!

WALLACE BERRY,
a character actor with an unusual list of fine performances to his credit, who is said to achieve his greatest triumph in the stellar role of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's colorful production of "Viva Villa," a film play based on the life of the Mexican revolutionary. Artist Davis here has deftly caught the spirit of the part as Mr. Berry interprets it.

If Filth Is to Be Weeded Out, Let Us Go About It Thoroughly

The Lay Crusade Against the Motion Picture Falls Short of Bullseye It Should Aim to Strike; We Apologize to an Artiste!

By Nelson B. Bell.

ONE views with alarm the willingness of the lay public to do a manifest injustice while attempting by a shrewd modification of the theory of the boycott to "reform" the motion pictures.

On last Monday morning this department dwelt at some length upon the sudden Nation-wide movement that is afoot to apply the most efficient and most effective scheme of censorship it is possible to invoke against the screen—a concerted and carefully planned campaign on the part of religious, civic and club groups, spanning the continent, to stamp out the production and distribution of unworthy films by making them unprofitable at the box office.

It was pointed out at that time that the movement is in the nature of a club in the hands of the Will H. Hays organization to assist it in the strict enforcement of the Hays Code of Morals, which, in itself, is an ample safeguard of the unimpeachable propriety of the cinema and its harmlessness to the masses.

If Will H. Hays' exalted precepts are once given full force and effect, the need of any National anxiety in the matter of forming "Legions of Decency" and the like will automatically pass out of existence.

In the meantime, however, the major hue and cry is to snuff out the screen's evil influence, salacity and general, all-around meretriciousness at its source; to delete these reprehensible stigmata from the script before the making of the given picture ever has progressed to the point of actual filming. That is an altruistic aspiration and an idealistic view that can not be too highly commended.

But the source of the evil is more deep-seated and goes farther back into the roots of source material than the picture's scenario. The screen should not be the sole beneficiary of the zeal for betterment of the earnest souls who now seek to purge it of its wickedness.

A great proportion of the dramatic material utilized in the formulation of plots for motion picture purposes is derived from novels and stage plays. Such objectionable features as find their way ultimately to the gaze of the cash customer seated comfortably before a silver sheet are not interpolated into the original works by over-zealous continuity departments. More often than not these qualities to which such emphatic objection is raised are minimized in the process of adaptation.

It therefore becomes the function of the reformer to go beyond the immediate script for the individual photoplay and examine the book or the play upon which that script is founded.

This really will give him something to think about!

• • • •

THIS column frequently before has gone on record, and now is willing and eager to do so again, that the average run of current novel is pitched at a lower level of ethical and moral consciousness and integrity than has been the case in decades.

There surges up within our anything but Puritanical nature a profound and bitter resentment every time we open a popular book and find emblazoned across its pages speeches, descriptions and realistic implications, couched in terms of such frankness that were they spoken across our library table, instead of lying printed upon it, we would do our feeble and timid Caspar Milquetoast utmost to sock the offender soundly on his nose and boot him off the premises.

After more decades of professional theatergoing than we have any immediate intention of admitting in terms of cold and convicting figures, we similarly cringe when profanities, blasphemies and the present era's crass obscenities come hurtling down across the footlights into the teeth of mixed audiences who ought to have the right to expect to be shielded from, instead of exposed to, such offensive license in places of public entertainment.

All this, of course, bears the implied stamp of approval of the undercurrent of resentment that seems to be aiming itself vigorously and exclusively at the motion picture; at least, to acknowledge the existence of a very urgent need for precisely such procedures as are now being invoked to purge the cinema of its impurities.

This is only partially true. Just as it has always been the contention of this column that censorship of the motion picture, if any, should be at its source, so now we carry that contention one step farther and insist that the reform wave that is so rapidly building itself up across the country direct its remedial measures beyond the motion picture to the source of its material.

If motion picture scripts are to be subjected to a rigid analysis and censorship, then, as a prerequisite to the justice of such a practice, let book and play manuscripts likewise be submitted to a penetrating and rigid examination before they are declared fit for public consumption.

It will be argued, no doubt, that these Sabbath castigations deal only in generalities and cite no specific instances of books or plays that transcend the bounds of common decency.

Definite citations are omitted, because the simpler task, by far, would be to mention the books or plays that do not contain some word, deed or situation not inimical to public morality in its broad sense. To catalogue the current lists of popular fiction and plays would be purely a work of supererogation.

This department holds no brief for filth, nor yet for the screen when it is offensive to the public good. It does, on the other hand, most decidedly hold a brief for fair play. If a crusade against libidinous matter is to be launched, let it be launched against all sources of such matter.

Riotous Farce Is Chosen for Players' Week

Rowdy Comedy Is Season's Hit, Still Running on Broadway.

The season's outstanding comedy hit on Broadway, "Sailor, Beware!" will be the sixth attraction offered by the National Theater Players, beginning tomorrow night.

"Sailor, Beware!" on its initial presentation at the Lyceum Theater, New York, last September was given the unqualified indorsement of the critics. It is still running on the Nation's main theatrical highway.

The scene of the play is laid in Panama City, Canal Zone, where the sailors of the U. S. S. Dakota await sailing orders.

On shore leave, they are ever in quest of romance, and find the patio of the Idle Hour Cafe a suitable arena for their strategies. Among the hostess at the Idle Hour is Billie "Stonewall" Jackson, so called because she has been adamant in her refusal to listen to the amorous pleas of the bluejackets.

Among the tars is Chester "Dynamite" Jones, so christened because he is invincible in his affairs with the opposite sex. He'll not take "no" for an answer.

The play revolves around the effort of Dynamite to bring about the complete surrender of Stonewall, with the whole fleet and the inmates of the Idle Hour wagering their salaries on the result.

The nine scenes are laid in the sailors' sleeping quarters on the Dakota, in the patio of the Idle Hour and on a Panama beach. Prof. Kenyon Nicholson, of Columbia University, who teaches playwrighting, wrote "Sailor, Beware!" in collaboration with one of his former students, Charles Robinson.

Kenyon Nicholson is best known in the theater as the author of "The Barker," which was to serve as a stepping stone to screen and stage stardom for Walter Huston and Claudette Colbert.

He also was responsible for "Torch Song" and "Stepdaughters of War."

Aviator Story Will Feature Cary Grant

Certain that he will repeat the success he scored in "The Eagle and the Hawk," one of his most popular films, Paramount today purchased for Cary Grant the Nell Shipman story, "The Eye of the Eagle," drama of a grounded aviator threatened with blindness.

Frances Drake is tentatively set for the feminine lead. Miss Drake is currently featured with Grant in "Ladies Should Listen." Frank Tuttle is directing.

Sam H. Harris Refuses to Admit That Theater Is Wholly Defunct

SAM H. HARRIS, who is about the only one of the old-established theatrical producers who is still extremely active, promises a program for next season which is one of the most comprehensive he has ever planned.

He positively refuses to be pessimistic about the state of the American theater and refuses to believe that it is dead.

Having produced the outstanding success of the season just ending, "As Thousands Cheer," he promises at least five other productions for next season.

Late in September he will offer a new play by George S. Kaufman, the most consistently successful of American dramatists, and Moss Hart, Mr. Kaufman's collaborator in that famous saga of the Hollywood studios, "Once in a Lifetime."

The new play is called "Merrily We Roll Along" and is said to be a serious drama with only incidental comedy touches. It will be in nine scenes and will cover a period of 18 years. It is announced that upward of 75 persons will be involved in its production.

When this is safely launched he will present a farce, as yet unnamed, by this same Mr. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind. These two wrote, it will be remembered, that delightfully satirical and amazingly successful musical comedy, "Of Thee I Sing."

Some time in September, Mr. Harris will also present Eddie Cantor in a new play which the comedian is fashioning at the moment with David Freedman.

This will be the ebullient Mr. Cantor's first venture in a "straight play." The story will be concerned with the life of a vaudeville, musical comedy and radio performer like Mr. Cantor himself.

As his public will expect him to sing there will be a scene in a radio studio with the comedian obliging at the microphone.

It is probable that Rubinoff and his orchestra will be concerned in the festivities.

Later in the fall there will be a new vehicle for those wild zanies, the Marx brothers, now reduced to three, the gentleman named Zeppo having been eliminated from the picture.

This, too, will be a play and not a musical comedy. Preliminary advices describe it as a "cock-eyed farce." It will most likely be based upon a picture scenario written for the comedian by Ben Hecht and Charles McArthur and never screened.

If and when "As Thousands Cheer" ever ends its engagement at the Music Box—it is now in its thirty-seventh week—it will be followed by another topical revue to be written by Irving Berlin and Moss Hart. They will retire to the country this month to begin the preliminary work on this.

In addition to these ventures, Mr. Harris is enormously interested in a projected dramatization of the compellingly interesting biography of the great Russian dancer, Nijinsky, written by his wife.

This is, at the moment, on the "best seller" lists all over the country.

If the play, which is now being written by Melchior Lengyel, is satisfactory, Mr. Harris proposes to present Paul Muni in the title role.

ABE LYMAN,
one of the most celebrated orchestra conductors now before the public, who this week brings his band and a group of specialty artists to Loew's Fox Theater to furnish the stage portion of the current bill.

George Walsh Tries To Regain Old Fame

Once a film idol, George Walsh, virile movie hero of more than 100 silent pictures, today is talking his way back to screen recognition.

Like many of the silent-day stars, Walsh was lost in the shuffle that saw some favorites of yesterday forge ahead and others drop by the wayside when sound came to the films. Walsh's best "break" since loud speakers were turned on in the theaters is being given him by Director Leo McCarey in Mae West's new picture, "It Ain't No Sin."

The Jolly Month of June Gives Hint of Scant Broadway Jollity

By Mark Barron.

NEW YORK, June 2 (AP).—The jolly month of June won't be so jolly as far as new Broadway shows are concerned.

Only two are scheduled for their premieres, although there is some consolation in the fact that the Rialto is already well supplied with hit entertainments.

The one attraction definitely scheduled to make its debut is the musical comedy, "Caviar," a semi-opera about a romance between a prima donna and an erstwhile Russian prince. The action takes place in Vienna and Constantinople. The leading roles are sung by Nanette Guilford, George Houston and Hugh Cameron.

Tentatively booked for June is an intimate revue referred to as "Life Begins at 8:30." With sketches by David Freedman, the author who turns out the funny lines for Eddie Cantor, Ray Bolger and Luella Gear have been signed for the cast, but there is a possibility the show may not reach town until much later in the summer.

June usually is crowded with what are known as "summer musicals," mostly witty and not too pretentious revues. There is a definite lack of them this year, not because of a scarcity of authors and producers, but because most of the star comedians have been gobbled up by movie and radio companies.

A star comedian is the first requisite of a successful summer musical parade. Fred Allen, Charles Butterworth, Phil Baker, Bert Lahr, Milton Berle, Jimmy Savo, W. C. Fields, Romney Brent and Jack Benny have been those funny men who boosted hot weather revues into the hit class in past years, but this June they are otherwise engaged.

In the place of the humorous, sophisticated revues, it appears that New York will be entertained by revivals of old-time melodramatic thrillers.

Tony Sarg and Cleon Throckmorton shortly will open a revival of "The Black Crook" in an ancient playhouse on the Bowery. With Nita Naldi and Ann Pennington in the leading roles, it will be presented as a farce and with many of its scenes rewritten to provide more amusement than it did as a serious show in the days when Frankie Bailey was one of its chief performers.

Harry Bannister already has revived P. T. Barnum's historic moral play, "The Drunkard," in an East Side beer garden, an attraction which has been luring what is known as the society trade.

In the Venice Theater, which used to be called Jolson's, there is to be a revival of "Ten Nights In a Bar Room." The cast will be composed of players from Yale University and Smith College.

GRACIE BARRIE,
popular songstress of vaudeville and revue, who this week returns to the stage of the Earle Theater to present her individual act and to serve also as mistress of ceremonies while Miss Audrey Sieber vacations briefly.

Notable Drama Is a Columbia June Offering

The Ben Levy play, "The Devil Passes," which the Columbia Players will present at Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets, Wednesday night, has had an interesting and somewhat stormy history. Produced first in London under the name of "The Devil," it was banned by the official censor after one performance because of the controversial nature of its subject.

Disappointed perhaps, but not dismayed, its producers brought it to New York, changed its name to "The Devil Passes," to avoid confusion with an earlier comedy called "The Devil," and presented it on Broadway in 1931. There it met with a rousing reception.

Burns Mantle included the piece in his selection of the ten best plays of 1931, commenting on its provocative theme and brilliant dialogue.

A New Feature Begins Run at Keith's Today

"Where Sinners Meet" Put in Place of "Dynamite" After Four Days.

Under a special arrangement with Radio Pictures, RKO-Keith's is giving the new Diana Wynyard-Clive Brook feature, "Where Sinners Meet," an advanced opening today.

This will have given the Jimmy Durante-Lupe Velez picture, "Strictly Dynamite," only a four days stay at the Fifteenth street theater, but the management feels that the excellent reaction and capacity business accorded "Where Sinners Meet" at the huge Radio City Music Hall in New York City justifies the special Sunday opening.

The new picture is an adaptation of the highly successful stage play "The Dover Road," by A. A. Milne, and in costarring Diana Wynyard and Clive Brook it marks the first appearance of these two stars since "Cavalcade."

As to the original stage play, it has not only been highly successful on Broadway but also in England, Canada and Australia. It was from this play that Britishers coined one of their favorite expressions, "They took the Dover road," a phrase applied to men who elope with other men's wives, and women who flee with other women's husbands.

The Dover road is the main highway from London to the port of Dover and so is the most important route to Paris, where speedy divorces are possible and where "the benefit of clergy" is not considered too important.

In addition to Miss Wynyard and Mr. Brook the cast has Reginald Owen, Billie Burke, Alan Mowbray and Gilbert Emery.

"Where Sinners Meet" is said to hold something of a brief, humorously and ironically cloaked, for the much discussed companionate marriage plan. Its theme is based on the contention that nine out of every ten marriages would never take place were the prospective brides and grooms privileged to learn in advance the concealed faults and annoying traits of their intended mates.

Gary Shows Sir Guy Fast-Shooting Art

Sir Guy Standing's respect for American gunmen mounted considerably the other day.

In scenes for "Now and Forever" he was required to beat Gary Cooper to the draw in an exchange of pistol shots.

But Sir Guy's fingers kept snarling in the trigger guard and eventually Cooper had to instruct him in the art of fast shooting. And this led the distinguished English actor and peer to remark that gunmen were artists—after a fashion.

Notes of Plays, People, Pictures and Parks Contributing to Summer Amusements

New Comedy Is Being Readied By Its Author

"Rhapsody in Blah," a new three-act comedy, by Frank Baer, Washington newspaperman, will be given a special summer presentation by the Pierce Hall Players on June 28 and 29, in their hall at Fifteenth and Harvard streets.

This is the third new play which they have presented since last year, the others being "Little White Mice," by Edward deS. Melcher, and "Year's End," by Olga Helms and William Rodon.

The play is being staged by the author and the cast of 17, now rehearsing under his direction, includes Jesse Veitch, who is playing the leading role of Honorable Hercules Rapp, member of Congress; Virginia True, as Helen, his daughter, and Charles Bell, as Bobby, his son, around whom much of the action revolves.

Season Thrives At Bay Resort

With Memorial Day past and June days here, and thoughts turning to vacations, the season at Seaside Park may be said to have really gotten under way.

From now on, the Chesapeake Beach playground will be constantly, throughout the summer months, the mecca of thousands of Washingtonians for whom Seaside spells vacation.

With completion of the new Seaside pier to replace the one destroyed in last fall's storm, one of the most enjoyable rides available to resort visitors is aboard the miniature railway. The Lilliputian express speeds along the pier at a 30-mile-an-hour clip. Passengers from the Baltimore boats are now brought directly to the park by means of this train.

For anglers, this has been a most unusual season at Seaside. Large catches of hardheads and trout have been reported for several weeks.

Where a Cooling Plunge Dispels the Summer Heat

When the sun beats hot and humidity runs high, gay throngs laugh at summer discomfort and find physical refreshment in the cooling waters of the Crystal Pool out at Glen Echo Park, one of the most perfectly appointed natatoria in this part of the country. Every facility is here provided for the "city vacationist" who enjoys water sports and sandy beaches. The Crystal Pool opened for the season a week ago.

Special Train Used For De Mille Troupe

Cecil B. De Mille and his company of 125 players and technicians have returned to the Hollywood studios from a two-day location trip to the Muroc Dry Lake on the Mojave Desert. During their desert stay the company lived aboard a special Santa Fe train of dining car, club and observation car and Pullman.

Yale Record.

The Yale record of 48.4 seconds for the quarter mile was held for two years by Lanny Ross, featured in "Melody In Spring," when he was an undergraduate at that university.

Off to Flying Season Opening

The past four days, including opening day May 30, found new Marshall Hall Park host to thousands of visitors.

The free parking admission policy, established last year, drew many families to the park by autobile, while the Wilson Line steamer, City of Washington, carried hundreds on the four regular daily trips.

The new rides proved especially popular with the opening day crowds. The Ferris wheel was an easy favorite, because of the beautiful view of the Potomac River.

Preserving Plumage Hot Task on Stage

Two hundred film workers are being forced to roast at high temperatures in order that Claudette Colbert may set off her beauty against a bank of ostrich feathers. In order to preserve the beauty of a background of feathers 30 feet wide and 20 feet high for a scene in Cecil B. DeMille's "Cleopatra," the stage had to maintain a temperature of above 86 degrees at all times.

March Honored.

Frederic March is the only Hollywood actor, so far, who has been included in the first edition of "Young Men's Who's Who."

Filth Is to Be Weeded Out

As among current stage offerings, current fiction and motion pictures, the cinema is the least of the offenders against good taste and the public morals.

IT is by no means impossible that the evidence afforded by "Stand Up and Cheer," the disjointed musical melange on view at Loew's Fox last week, is not sufficient to justify a final estimate of the unusual gifts with which little Miss Shirley Temple is endowed.

On the basis of her appearances in this pretentious patriotic pageant, there seemed to us little upon which to base a claim of greatness beyond the measure enjoyed by a large number of other charming, poised and reasonably clever youngsters.

It appears, however, that tiny Miss Temple must have something a little beyond the rest. Seldom have such rhapsodies rung about the ears of any player as have been evoked among New York's critical gentry by her performance in the title role of "Little Miss Marker."

Not only do the first-string motion picture reviewers go into ecstasies concerning her, but the hard-boiled sports writers, too—out of compliment to their confrere, Damon Runyon, who wrote the story of "Little Miss Marker"—toss off panegyrics that would do honor to a Bernhardt or a Duse in celebration of the magnificence of her work.

So we humbly recant. This young woman must have something in her precocious repertoire that "Stand Up and Cheer" failed utterly to disclose.

We, therefore, withhold judgment and stand prepared to hail her as the genius she is declared to be, in her next picture.

Never let it be said that we failed in chivalry to an artiste and a lady!

Straight From the Studios

Marie Dressler, Grand Dame of Screen, Convalescing; A Toothless Lion Spreads Terror on Set; Jottings From Hollywood.

By Speed Kendall.

Hollywood, June 2.—Two months hence, Marie Dressler, grand dame of the screen, will be back in our midst after a long convalescence at Santa Barbara. This, in fact, is the message she herself wanted delivered to her many friends in Hollywood, which was brought back today by a friend who visited her.

Miss Dressler was more seriously ill than anyone imagined, but like the good trouper she is, she rallied and is regaining her strength. Her appetite has returned and she eats everything. The best indication that all is well again, this friend said, is that Miss Dressler finds herself unconsciously, but characteristically, finding fault with little things. That means something.

As soon as she is able she will return to the cameras at M-G-M in the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, "Tish." But just as a reminder, Miss Dressler is accepting but few visitors.

The Lion That Didn't Bite.

Actors, actresses, props, grips, electricians and cameramen scattered helter-skelter. "King," the Radio studio lion, was amuck on the "Afterwards" set. All scattered, that is, save Director James Cruze, who stood by his guns and branded the others as cowards. But when "King" approached, Cruze, too, hit for the rafters.

Jack Schultz, circus old-timer and owner of the beast, hove in sight, and observing the situation, burst into laughter. Cruze demanded an explanation; he got it.

Schultze boldly opened "King's" mouth; he had no teeth!

We Chorus Boys.

James Cagney and Allen Jenkins were in the chorus together on Broadway in "Pitter Patter." There are, they say, pictures in existence to prove this statement. Now they are both under contract at Warner Brothers and great friends. In this show Cagney met the girl that later became his wife.

Today's Tribute.

This goes to B. P. Schulberg for taking a chance. He is casting Fred MacMurray as Sylvia Sidney's leading man in "One Way Ticket," confident that the youth will make good in spite of the fact he has had no screen or dramatic experience outside of singing with a band in a Broadway musical. MacMurray is 25 years of age and was discovered by New York talent scouts. The picture starts today.

Help, Three Times, Exclamation Point.

This joke is on Mary Carlisle. She became imprisoned in her studio dressing room when a lock jammed, and had to be rescued, according to the story yesterday. She was found missing when called to the set of "The Rear Car." A messenger was sent for her, because there is no telephone in her room, and, to his amazement, found a red skirt dangling from a yardstick stuck in the window grating. A locksmith proved to be her hero.

In the Red Once More.

Although June Knight just returned from a three-month vacation in Florida, she decided she wanted another change. Today we learn she slipped into her favorite Hollywood beauty shop and emerged with her blonde tresses dyed back to their natural color—dark red.

Red Hot Papa With Apologies to Soph!

Rotund and jovial Eugene Palette sat nonchalantly watching a photographer taking still pictures of Warren William and Dorothy Tree for publicity on "The Dragon Murder Case." The cameraman, as a gag, asked Palette if he would pose in some burning love scenes with Miss Tree. He would.

"Ready—still!" called the man with the bulb. He clicked the flashlight—the bulb flew into a thousand and one pieces.

"Boy, oh, boy," murmured Palette. "Am I the great lover—just ask me!"

Odd and Interesting People and Events.

Charlie Murray wears at least once in every picture an old-fashioned green string bow tie, because he and his father used to fight over it . . . Clark Gable is now a Mason . . . Frederic March, back from a beach sojourn, found his sideburns sun-bleached and had to dye them before resuming work.

'Enter Madame' to Be Made Into Picture

Paramount last week purchased "Enter Madame," colorful story of a prima donna's career. Authors are Gilda Varesi and Dolly Byrne. Miss Varesi, an actress of note some years ago, scored her greatest success in the play.

Man for Mae.

Mae West's new leading man, Roger Pryor, in "It Ain't No Sin," has brown eyes and dark hair—like Cary Grant, Mae's screen lover in her two other starring "sinemas."

DOROTHEA LEWIS, well-known Washington writer and playwright, who will enact the principal feminine role in Benn W. Levy's "The Devil Passes," when the Columbia Players present the drama in Pierce Hall on Wednesday night.

Frances Fuller in 'Ladies First' Cast

Frances Fuller, away from Hollywood for more than six months while engaged in a Broadway play, has returned to the Paramount studios, where she is under contract, and stepped into the leading feminine part opposite George Bancroft in "Ladies First," just entering production with Gilbert Pratt directing.

Sterling Play Is Listed For National's Next

Another success of the current New York season, Keith Winter's "The Shining Hour," will be the seventh attraction of the National Theater Players, opening next Monday night, June 11.

New York critics found that it possessed charm and intelligence, wit and dramatic force and that it is engaging in all that meets ear and eye.

In "The Shining Hour," the playwright's problem is: "Shouldn't two people really made for each other go ahead and take their happiness regardless of the suffering of third parties?"

Is is a self-contained study of character in the English countryside, quickened by an episode of an off-stage horror at the conclusion of the second act and sobered in the third act by a frightened scene of torment and retrospection.

"The Shining Hour" will offer the National Theater Players in a story in which the dominant quality is love in its curious ramifications, with excellent parts for Ruth Abbott and Roy Roberts.

Washington will see "The Shining Hour" before this play is presented in London next October. The American production was by Max Gordon and it was released for the local engagement immediately after that producer sold the picture rights to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Glen Echo Park Offers Variety At Small Cost

A trip to Glen Echo will be found "just what the doctor ordered" for that tired feeling, overwork, worry, or any of the things that should be banished in the jolly days of June.

Here will be found recreation and amusement in the outdoors—a congenial crowd of well-behaved people, and a staff of employes bent on pleasing.

Crystal Pool, for instance, with its fine sandy beaches, unmatchable swimming and diving facilities, is like a refreshing shower on a sultry day.

The ride on the coaster dip, the airplane swings, the old mill or any of the fast-speeding thrillers will make trouble vanish like smoke on a windy day.

For those who merely wish to take their ease, the picnic groves are a standing invitation to relax and watch King Fun amuse his subjects. Here will be found benches, tables, chairs and every hing that is necessary to the fine art of loafing. Refreshments, too, may be had on all sides at city prices.

Glen Echo has what it takes to send everybody home rejuvenated.

Community Center Symphony Orchestra to Present Concert Tuesday at Central High

Civic Group Is Composed Only of Amateur Musicians

First Public Appearance of Newly Organized Body Will Be Directed By Bailey F. Alart in School Auditorium at 8:30 P. M.

The Community Center Civic Symphony Orchestra will make its first public appearance in a concert, under the direction of Bailey F. Alart, in Central High School Auditorium on Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. This organizatin of amateur musicians, who play for their own enjoyment and for the experience gained in orchestral training, has been in existence for only a few months, making notable progress.

While the membership is now more than 60, additional instruments are needed, not only to bring the orchestra up to the full symphonic complement of 100 pieces, but also to assure a sufficient number of players to be drawn upon for concert at short notice. The orchestra will play for Community Center activities only.

Fees Not Required.

Members are not required to pay dues or fees. This opportunity to obtain training in orchestral technique is appreciated by the members, who are enthusiastic over their work. Applications for membership will be received by Mr. Alart at rehearsals Tuesday evenings after this week.

The program for the first concert includes Schubert's B minor ("unfinished") symphony, two movements, from Chaikovski's "Symphonie Pathetique," the first movement of Rimski-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" suite, Nicolai's overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and a fantasia on airs from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci."

This civic orchestra is an organization which deserves the support of those interested in the musical advancement of the city, and that support can be manifested in two ways—by attending its concerts and by encouraging its growth through increase in membership. The entire undertaking is idealistic, for the members of the orchestra, as well as the conductor, give their time to rehearsals and concerts solely for the cause of music.

Offers Valuable Training.

The advantages of a civic orchestra of this nature are enjoyed both by the musicians who make up its personnel and by the music lovers who hear the programs that it will present in connection with Community Center activities. Every amateur musician knows that the pleasure of playing is enhanced in ensemble work; practice in solitude is often a task, but making music in company with others is a delight.

Moreover, the opportunity to obtain orchestral training under an experienced director is one not to be lightly disregarded. The civic orchestra offers this training without cost to any young musician who possesses the requisite technical ability in instrumental playing, and Mr. Alart has not set the standards so high that they are insuperable for the average.

It is Mr. Alart's aim to build the orchestra up to 100 members, or more, so that modern symphonic works can be properly performed with adequate instrumentation.

Assisting the new orchestra is a board of advisers headed by Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the Community Center Department, and comprising:

Mrs. C. H. Brown	Thomas C. Littlepage
Dr. E. N. C. Barnes	Mrs. Eugene Meyer
Mary E. Coulson	E. J. Murphy
John B. Colpoys	Mrs. Gertrude Nash
Mrs. H. G. Doyle	Claude W. Owen

Rules Are Outlined For Pianists' Club

Applicants Must Appear for Auditions.

In response to requests for information about membership in the Washington Pianists' Club, which recently gave its eleventh annual festival, Mrs. Martin A. Morrison, founder and director of the organization, makes the following announcement:

"The club's active membership of ten is selected from the most promising applicants appearing for the auditions held by the director the fourth week in October of each year. The applicant must be under 29, and be receiving piano-forte instruction one hour weekly, continuously from October 1 to June 1 of the current year. He must be recommended by his teacher as to personal character, as an outstanding pupil, as to ability to meet entrance requirements, and as to ability to prepare a 45-minute artist program by April 1.

"This program is to be selected by the teacher along lines established by the club to secure uniformity and insure a balanced course of study. At the October auditions, to be arranged for in advance by teacher of applicant, the applicant is requested to play the following compositions, each of which must have been studied with the teacher:

"A Prelude and Fugue from Bach's well-tempered clavichord (previous study of all two-part inventions and six three-part inventions); a Sonata by Beethoven (previous study of sonatas by Haydn and Mozart); two compositions, slow and quick tempo, respectively, by Chopin or Schumann (previous study of compositions by Mendelssohn and Schubert).

"While it is desirable to have only one pupil of a given teacher in the active member class, more than one may be selected to complete the required ten. The successful applicants are required to play from one to three numbers of their 'artist programs' at each regular meeting of the club. The director may choose from two to four pupils as 'emergency substitutes,' who will hold themselves in readiness to replace an active member at the festival, if needed.

"An active membership lasts one season, but it is possible to rewin it until the member has been presented in six festival recitals, when he is graduated with honor, and can again appear only when recalled as 'guest pianist.'

"Associate membership is open to students under 29, who are receiving one hour's piano instruction weekly, and who bring a recommendation from their teachers as to personal character and interest in music. Associate members are not subject to auditions, nor are they expected to play at regular meetings, which are held on alternate Sundays from 3:30 to 5 p. m., beginning November 3.

"For the maintenance of the club and the presentation of its May festivals, dues are required. Information on this point may be obtained by writing to the director at 3017 Thirteenth street northwest."

Harmony Problems Theme of Article

Arnold Schoenberg's Ideas Given in Magazine.

Arnold Schoenberg's views on problems of harmony today are presented in an extensive study written by him for the May issue of Modern Music, which is just off the press. This is the first article contributed by Dr. Schoenberg to an American magazine. It deals with the subject so long identified as one of his major interests—tonality.

Other features are "The State of Musical Austria Today," by the Viennese critic, Paul Stefan; "A Defense of the Ballet," by Lincoln Kirkstein; "Exotic and Contemporary Music," by Raymond Petit, Parisian composer and critic. Reviews of the current season are contributed by Theodore Chanler for New York, Alfred Frankenstein for Chicago, Adelaide Hooker for Rochester, Guido M. Gatti for Italy, and Irving Kolodin on the latest recordings of contemporary music.

The April festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music is discussed by Frederick Jacobi, the American composer, who covered this event in Florence for the magazine. The illustrations are a caricature-portrait of Schoenberg by Frueh, and two settings by Cipriano Oppo for the Roman premiere of Malipiro's opera, "La Favola del Figlio Cambiato," which has been forbidden further performance in Italy by a recent edict of Mussolini.

Wentworth Opera Unit to Give "The Bohemian Girl" This Week

Community Center Department Sponsors Program for Wednesday and Thursday at Roosevelt High School Auditorium.

Michael William Balfe's perennially popular opera, "The Bohemian Girl," will be presented by the Estelle Wentworth Opera Group next Wednesday and Thursday evenings in the Roosevelt High School auditorium, under the auspices of the Community Center Department. The principal roles will be sung by Alma Harris (Arline), J. Raymond Baine (Thaddeus), Mildred Sherman (Gypsy Queen), Harry E. Yeide (Devilshoof), Ira P. Meyer (Count Arnheim), Eugene Stevens (Florestine) and Melville Veitch (captain of the guard).

Mary Day and Betty Yoder, of the Lisa Gardiner Dancers, will interpolate a Hungarian Gypsy dance, taken from Delibes "Coppelia." There will be a large and effective chorus. Miss Wentworth will conduct.

Balfe was born in Dublin, May 15, 1808, the son of a dancing master. At the age of 7 he composed a polacca, and two years later made his debut as a violinist. After the death of his father in 1823, he was engaged as a violinist in the Drury Lane Theater orchestra, and the same year he made an unsuccessful debut as a barytone in "Der Freischuetz" at Norwich.

In 1825 he was taken to Rome by Count Mazzara, and while there he wrote his first stage work, a ballet entitled "La Perouse." He still had ambitions to be an operatic singer and at the close of 1827 he sang the role of Figaro in Rossini's "Barber of Seville" in Paris. Returning to Italy, he remained in that country six years, singing in various theaters and composing several operas, which were produced in Palermo, Pavia and Milan. The height of his career as a singer was reached when he appeared with Malibran at La Scala.

Balfe returned to England in the spring of 1833, and on October 29, 1835, his first opera in English, "The Siege of Rochelle," was rapturously received at Drury Lane. "The Maid of Artois" followed a year later. In 1838 he sang the role of Papageno in the first performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute" in English. He continued to compose operas and to enjoy steady popularity until he retired in 1864 and amused himself with farming in Hertfordshire. He died October 20, 1870.

When his popularity was at its crest he wrote several operas for the Opera Comique and the Grand Opera in Paris, and was named a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Of the 20 operas which he composed to English texts, only "The Bohemian Girl" has remained in the standard repertory. The others, with the exception of "Satanella," which is occasionally performed, have been forgotten.

Women's Organizations Take Active Part in Promoting Playground Activities

Club Members Find Children Gain in Health and Character

Recreational System in District Developed Largely Through Activities of Groups; Move Got Strong Impetus During War Period.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

The games the boys and girls are playing and the recreation of the people of Washington in general are occupying the attention of many of the women's organizations as summer begins. These are regarded as a vital subject related not only to the mental and physical development of the coming generation, but also to the effect proper recreational pursuits have on the National character.

The many programs and campaigns for the safeguarding of the boys and girls of the Nation, to which Washington women's organizations have given their support, have as outstanding features providing safe and sane surroundings and healthful conditions for recreational centers.

Play Sites Needed.

Washington clubwomen early recognized the necessity for proper play space for the boys and girls and out-of-door recreational centers for the men and women. Our playgrounds have been in operation nearly 30 years, largely through the efforts of the women of Washington.

In recent years educational and other groups of women have taken special interest in the recreational facilities of our National Capital. It was the women of Washington who first protested against downtown schools without yards or play space.

So effective were these protests that now no school is considered adequate that has not some play space and equipment. It was the women of the organizations of Washington, also, who joined with the parents in their efforts to have the school playgrounds kept open during summer and vacation periods.

Won Spurs During War.

Today our Washington playgrounds are more than mere places where the boys and girls can go to play. They are centers of constructive thought in play facilities for the young. Miss Sybil Baker, director of Washington playgrounds, won her spurs as a recreational director and leader during the World War, when Washington was crowded with the youth of the land, anxious to "help win the war" by working in the Government or serving as volunteers in war work.

The leisure time pursuits of these young people were important, and Miss Baker was among the group of women who gave effective service in this regard. In order to assure her of their cooperation and interest in the work she is doing for the recreational problem of the city, the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs has made Miss Baker chairman of the playgrounds committee of the federation.

Other organizations and clubs have also asked her to assist them. There is not a woman's club of any size in Washington that has not a playground committee. The committee members and organization leaders really work for the playgrounds, not only by giving them encouragement, but in doing what they can to secure adequate appropriations.

Closeness Held Vital.

Most of the committee members agree with the current belief of playground and recreational experts that every play center, school or municipal, should be within a walking distance of one-fourth to one-half a mile for every small child and one-half to three-fourths mile for larger children.

The clubwomen of the District view with concern the increasing need for playground facilities and at every meeting regret is expressed that the scope of the playgrounds in many sections of the city does not provide adequate space for all the boys and girls of the neighborhoods who would like to use them.

Most of the women's organization centers have a real program of recreations for their members, especially during the summer months with the Young Women's Christian Association centers and the Women's City Club as leaders.

Character Affected.

The serious consideration of recreation and play, as affecting character and health, has been generally prevalent among Washington women's groups for the last 20 years or more, inspired by the directed play and games for Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls and the information on such lines sent out by the United States Government and by organizations.

One of the most important meetings of recreational experts ever held in Washington was that over which Mrs. Herbert Hoover presided when Mr. Hoover was Secretary of Commerce. This conference was called in the auditorium of the new National Museum to consider the proper supervision of athletics for young girls. The findings of this conference are still used as guides by many of the local women's organizations in formulating their programs in behalf of recreational standards for Washington girls and young women.

There is a general indorsement among the women's groups of walking from both an exercise and recreational standpoint. They point out that walking is one of the most economical of all recreational pursuits. Practically every club that has a program for the summer include "walking" picnics to the parks and nearby places of interest, or even week-end walking camping trips.

Walking Trips Planned.

Many of the June meetings of Washington organizations are combined with walking trips to the home of some member on the outskirts of Washington or to some of the many outlying parks or woods.

Play as a character and health builder is as old as history. Homer's children built castles and ran races and played games on the sands. The Greek and Roman children joined in the public games of their elders or played skipping rope, hopscotch, tug of war, blind man's bluff, hide and seek or kiss the ring.

Folk songs and folk dances were all inspired by play and recreation or reflect the passing show of events of the various eras of the history of the world.

Mayos of Virginia Are Among Those With Cherished Heritage

Their History Goes Far Back in Somersetshire, England; Two Sons Came to Virginia in 1723 and Aided in Developing City of Richmond.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

The recent celebration of the 100th anniversary of the death of Marquis de Lafayette, Revolutionary patriot and knight of liberty, recalled in many cities incidents of his American friendships treasured in family archives for the century since his passing.

This situation is not peculiar to Washington, but is to be found in Richmond, Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia and other American cities, where some of the proudest boasts of leading families are that their ancestors were personal friends of the great Frenchman. Among such cherished Richmond memories are those of the distinguished Mayo family, among the first citizens of Virgina from colonial days.

These early Virginia Mayos were descended from the Mayos of Somersetshire, England, a family foremost in the history of that country. Some of its sons served in the church and they were people of education and culture. One of the clergymen Mayos in the old world was the Rev. Joseph Mayo II, of Poulshot, County Wilts, Somersetshire, who was born on August 17, 1656, and died at Poulshot in 1691. His wife, was a Miss Elizabeth Hooper of Somerset.

Two Sons Came to America.

Among their children were two sons, William and Joseph. When these boys grew to manhood the lure of the New World drew them away from the rectory. William was a graduate of New College Oxford, where he had learned civil engineering.

Their first stop was at the Barbadoes, where William married Francis Gould and Joseph was wed to Anne Carrington. In 1723 the brothers and their families came to Virginia. Joseph erected a home at Powhatan, near the Falls of the James, and later was a vestryman of old St. John's Church, at Richmond. Unfortunately, he was not survived by any of his nine children.

William settled at Fine Creek, Goochland, and became the first county surveyor, putting his engineering talent to good use in the new land. He was one of those who proposed a town to be at or near the north side of the Falls of the James, which was the beginning of the city of Richmond.

Lays Out Streets.

Maj. Mayo laid out a little checkerboard of 32 squares, each with four lots, the principal streets designated by letters of the alphabet and the cross streets by numerals. The major was married twice, his second wife being Anne Peratt (Parrott). He died in November, 1744.

His son, John, was married to Mary Tabb, of Gloucester, Va., and served in the State line in the Revolution.

One of the sons of John Mayo, sr., Col. John Mayo, jr., followed in the footsteps of his grandfather and was greatly interested in the progress of the City of Richmond. He built a bridge there at his own expense after trying vainly to get the legislature to finance it. "Mayo's Bridge" long was a landmark of Richmond.

Col. John Mayo, jr., was married to Abigail De Hart, who was a granddaughter of Col. Jacob de Hart, commander of the New Jersey forces on the frontier in 1756. Her own father, John de Hart, was a member of the Continental Congress and his portrait hangs in Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

Edward Carrington Mayo, one of the three surviving children of Col. and Mrs. John Mayo, jr., was educated at Yale and was well known in Richmond life. His sister, Maria, became the wife of Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott, U. S. A.

Mrs. Charlotte M. Dorsett, Indian Head, Maryland—I have a life of Anne Hutchinson written by Winifred King Ruggs, called "Unafraid."

Is that the Anne Hutchinson you mean? This one lived about 1653. Her mother was Bridget Dryden and her father was Francis Marbury and Anne married John Hutchinson.

After her husband's death she came to America, Pelham Bay, with many children. She and almost all of her children were killed by the Indians. She had a daughter Anne and one named Susan. The last-named was carried off by the Indians, afterward returned. There is a long index of Hutchinsons in my book. If I can help you let me know.

Japanese Air Mail Memorial Set Is Received

F. R. Rice Also Exhibits First Day Cover From Nippon.

President F. R. Rice, of the Collectors Club, has received a first day cover from Japan and a set of air mail commemorative stamps recently issued.

The cover from Yokohama was first day cancellation, April 20, 1934, for the use of the name "Nippon" as the name of Japan in the future on all postal cancellations.

Both the cover and the stamps were sent to Mr. Rice by his friend, Capt. E. A. Henn, U. S. A.

In commemoration of the inauguration of the Japanese Communications System in April the postoffice department issued a set of four air mail stamps neatly printed on a sheet of granite paper, each stamp perforated and in the original colors. The central design on the souvenir sheet is cancellation in form showing a dove in flight. Japanese inscriptions tell the story. Above the circle is the date of issue in the present reign of the emperor. Then, above the dove, "In commemoration of the inauguration of the Japanese Communications System, Tokyo." At the left is "April 20," and the right "Department of Communications." Below the dove, "Made by the Printing Office of the Japanese Cabinet."

The 9½ sen carmine stamp, at the upper right, is a new stamp first placed on sale March 1, this year. The others are of the 1929 issue, 16½ sen yellow green, 18 sen ultramarine, and 33 sen gray. The inscription in the border at the top of each of the stamps is, "Postoffice of Nippon."

Maj. K. Sataku, Assistant Military Attache of the Japanese Embassy, is interested in the stamps of his country and viewed these commemoratives with much interest.

Tannou Touva Presents Pair Of New Issues

Sarawak's White Sultan and Manchukuo's Ruler on Other Sets.

Tannou Touva, in northern Mongolia, is an autonomous republic identified with Soviet Russia in Asia. It is situated in the Tannu Mountains on the Siberian border. Its first issue of stamps dates from 1926. Its money is kopecks and rubles, 100k equaling 1r.

Two new sets have just been issued by this republic. The registration series is of eight values, as follows: 1k bright orange, Mongolian peasant on horseback; 2k green, native hunting; 3k carmine, native craftsman; 4k dark violet, farm tractor; 5k ultramarine, native milking a musk ox; 10k brown, camel caravan; 15k brown lilac, hunter lassoing a stag, and 20k black, hunter shooting a fox with bow and arrow. The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The question of establishing permanent quarters for the many Washington philatelic organizations now is being seriously considered by members of the Washington Philatelic Society, the Washington Air Mail Society, the Collectors Club and other societies. At present these societies meet weekly and monthly and at each meeting visitors are present, not a few being from out of town. In many cities, hotels or office buildings furnish a room for a permanent gathering place where philatelic literature, daily papers, frames of stamps and other information are at hand.

Now that the Philatelic Agency has moved into the Postoffice Department Building, and the other quarters of the Government bureaus in which the philatelist is interested are near each other, the visitor, as well as the Washington collector, will welcome a place to visit with other collectors.

A downtown gatherng place, of course, is advisable, and it is expected that action will soon take place in this connection. There are members of the Washington stamp clubs who are willing to back the establishment of permanent quarters and if a hotel is selected it is probable that arrangements can easily be made for the stated meetings of the organizations to be held at that same hotel.

Out-of-town collectors are coming to Washington daily and it is to the advantage of everyone here interested in philatelic matters that such a move be perfected as quickly as possible. The philatelic press, as well as the newspapers that carry stamp columns, will gladly keep the public posted as to these quarters, and such a move will go along way toward making Washington a real center for all philatelic activities.

The question of exhibitions, auction sales, exchange and bourse ideas, as well as the philatelic reading room, are all of importance, and with the selection of quarters it will be a comparatively easy matter to put into execution these valuable bureaus.

In many of the business organizations of Washington are stamp collectors and it is safe to assume that some help from this source will be forthcoming at the proper time.

Commemorative Issue Is Received

Uruguay's Anniversary Set Has Eight Values.

The issue of eight commemorative values of Uruguay, honoring the first anniversary of the third republic, has just been received by Harry B. Mason.

The values are: 1p carmine and red, 3c yellow green and green, 7c brown red and red, 12c ultramarine and blue, 17c brown and carmine, 20c yellow and black, 36c purple and blue, 50c black and blue. The second color referred to is a background in the stamp, horizontal lined.

The stamps are lithographed by Casa A. Barreiro y Ramos on unwatermarked paper, perforated 11½.

Mr. Mason says that the 1 peso stamp promises to become scarce. Only 6,000 of these stamps were issued, he says, of which 2,000 or 2,500 are to be used for air mail, being surcharged. These were sold out at the postoffice on the first day of sale.

D. C. Collectors Due To Attend Convention

D. E. Lindsay, of Philadelphia, has been in Washington calling upon members of the Collectors Club, Branch No. 5, Society of Philatelic Americans. Mr. Lindsay is chairman of the committee on entertainment of the S. P. A., for the annual convention, which is to be held in Philadelphia August 23 to August 25. It is expected that a large number of members and friends of the branch in Washington will attend.

One of the leading features of the meeting will be a stamp exhibition, Philadelphia Branch No. 30, S. P. A., the Ledger Stamp Club and the Precancel Society of America combining. This exhibit will be held in the Public Ledger auditorium.

The convention will be held at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. At the annual banquet Col. Charles S. Hamilton, a member of Branch No. 5, will be among the speakers.

Hotel Meeting Is Held By Philatelic Society

At the meeting of the Washington Philatelic Society Wednesday evening at the Carlton Hotel, members discussed informally stamp matters of current interest.

Vice President Bond and Secretary Vaughn were in charge. At the meeting Wednesday the Ward collection will be sold at auction.

Stamp Club of the Air.

The Washington Stamp Club of the Air is still on WOL each Tuesday evening at 7:45 o'clock. The president, Albert F. Kunze, is giving talks of the Revolutionary heroes who have become a part of the stamp history of the country.

Heavy Demand By Collectors Turned Down

3,500,000 Being Printed in 18 Denominations in Issue.

The District of Columbia has gone into selling of revenue stamps for the liquor tax. This "postoffice" is doing a big business in the office of the tax collector in the District Building. Stamp collectors who are continually calling to buy the stamps are being turned down of course. This issue is for revenue purposes only and can be purchased on certification by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board. Dealers securing such certificates purchase stamps in any quantity desired. During the past few days many thousand stamps have been sold.

Upwards of 3,500,000 will be printed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Already several hundred thousand stamps of all denominations have been received at the tax office.

The stamps are about the size of the Mother's Day stamps and are of 18 denominations. They are of a neat design, at the top of the stamp the words, "District of Columbia" appearing. In the center just below these words in large figures is the numeral ¼, ½, ⅛ or 1-16, as the case may be, and just below the word "gallon." At the bottom of the stamp are the words, printed in sheets of 50 stamps, are of three general varieties as follows:

The alcohol stamps are yellow, printed in sheets of 50 stamps priced thus: 1 gallon, $1.10 each, $55 a sheet; ¼ quarts, 27½c, $13.75; ⅛ pints, 13¾c, $6.88; 1-16, 1/32 pints, 6⅞c, $3.44.

The champagne or spirits stamps are orange, printed in sheets of 50 stamps, priced as follows: 1 gallon, 50c each, $25 a sheet; ¼ quarts, 12½c, $6.25; ⅛ pints, 6¼c, $3.13; 1-16 1/32 pints 3⅛c, $1.57; 1-5 gallon, 10c, $5; 1-10 gallon, 5c, $2.50; 1-20 gallon, 2½c, $1.25.

The wine stamps are green, printed in sheets of 50 stamps, and priced as follows: 1 gallon, 35c each, $17.50 a sheet; ¼ quarts, 8¾c, $4.38; ⅛ pints, 4⅜c, $2.19; 1-16, 1/32 pints, 2 3-16c, $1.10; 1-5 gallon, 7c, $3.50; 1-10 gallon, 3½c, $1.75; 1-20 gallon, 1¾c, 88 cents.

There has been some confusion among the liquor dealers as to the stamps for the various brands of liquor. The ⅛-gallon stamp for alcohol and spirits while of different values and colors is confusing and stamps intended for one class are placed on the other and the dealer pays more than he should. As one official said, the kind of liquor the stamp calls for should be printed on the stamp, thus ending this confusion.

The Washington Philatelist

Philatelic Notes

The convention of the American Air Mail Society will be held in Chicago August 30, 31 and September 1. Francis B. Leech and Maurice S. Petty, both members of the Washington Air Mail Society, are vice president and director, respectively, of the former society.

Donald E. Dickason, of Worcester, Ohio, started the first auction sale service for air mail stamps and covers several years ago, and his forty-second sale occurred yesterday.

The Revenue Service Philatelists is the name of a new society organized in the Internal Revenue Bureau, Frederick J. Roy being president. Meetings are held the second Mondays of each month at the bureau at 4:30 p. m.

Ed Kee is showing a Mother's Day cover that was not advertised a "first day" cachet. This cover bears a Mother's Day stamp with this cancellation: "Dothan, Alabama, Ap. 25, 10 a. m., 1934." It was addressed to a Washingtin firm.

There will be a special cachet applied to all philatelic mail going through the Washington postoffice on Monday, June 11, the day the new Postoffice Department Building will be dedicated. Postmaster General Farley has arranged an elaborate program for the dedication.

The design of the new Wisconsin tercentenary stamp will be that of E. W. Deming's famous painting, the landing of Jean Nicolet near Green Bay, Wis., in 1634, now in the State capitol at Madison. The stamp will be the size of the Mother's Day stamp, 3 cents its value and purple in color in all probability.

Complaints are being made to stamp clerks in many postoffices about the Mother's Day stamps, that they are too large and that it takes too long to stick them to the envelopes.

President Roosevelt has accepted the invitation to be the honorary sponsor of the stamp exhibition to be held in New York City in May, 1936, by the Association for Stamp Exhibitions, Inc., which has conducted exhibitions since 1912. Alfred F. Lichtenstein is president of the association and John A. Klemann, secretary.

Claude W. Parker, member of the Universal Ship Cancellation Society, has received a large number of cachets from many of the ships of the United States Fleet en route to New York from the Pacific Coast. His collection of ship cancellations is a most interesting and valuable one.

A new issue of Philippine stamps for general postal use is being printed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, an issue of 14 values.

The Atlantic City Stamp Club will be host to the American Philatelic Society convention at Atlantic City in August.

Denominations Given For New Parks Series

The new series of National Parks stamps soon to be issued by the Postoffice Department, will be of the following denominations and National Park illustrations: 1 cent, Yosemite, Calif.; 2-cent, Grand Canyon, Ariz.; 3-cent, Mount Rainier, Wash.; 4-cent, Mesa Verde, Colo.; 5-cent, Yellowstone, Wyo.; 6-cent, Zion, Utah; 7-cent, Acadia, Maine; 8-cent, Sequoia, Calif.; 9-cent, Glacier, Mont., and 10-cent, Great Smoky Mountains, North Carolina and Tennessee.

Another statement will be issued giving the colors selected as well as the designs and first-day sales.

Museum Philatelist Addresses Meeting

Collectors Club Convenes on Tuesday.

The Collectors Club held a well-attended meeting Tuesday night, President F. L. Rice presiding. A large number of visitors were present.

Mrs. C. L. Manning, philatelist at the National Museum, was the guest speaker, talking on the stamp collection at the Museum and on the interesting features there for stamp collectors. She also displayed a number of sheets of United States stamps.

The meeting next Tuesday will be held in Room 6, Thomson School, corner Twelfth and L streets northwest, the new meeting place. An auction will feature the meeting, several lots of old Mexico and British Colonials to be disposed of.

Philatelic Agency Now Using Its New Offices

The Philatelic Agency is now open for business in its new quarters in the new Postoffice Department Building on Pennsylvania avenue between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets.

The stamps are being sold on the sixth floor, while the offices of Robert E. Fellers, chief of the agency, are on the second floor. It will be some days before the agency is all in proper shape, but in the meantime, business is going on as usual. The stock of $1,000,000 worth of stamps was moved from the old quarters in the City Postoffice without mishap.

First Byrd Stamps Arrive in District

The Byrd stamps arrived in Washington Tuesday. Many collectors received the much coveted covers. It is estimated that between 15,000 and 18,000 covers arrived in the first mail from the expedition.

The covers bear the wavy cancellation marked: "Little America, January 31, 8 p. m., 1934, Antarctica."

Big Row Looms In Maryland Primaries—

RITCHIE FACES TARGET FIRE
As the 'Perennial Governor'

Baltimore's Mayor Jackson Challenges Governor's Right to Reelection, on Ground That 19 Years' Tenure of Office Defeats Democratic Ideas.

By ROBERT TALLEY.

IN these days of dictators, should an American Commonwealth—and especially one whose patriots spilled their blood in the armies of George Washington for the ideals of the Nation's founders—be governed by a "dictator," even of its own making, for 19 consecutive years?

In the historic old "Free State" of Maryland, where Albert C. Ritchie has been Governor longer than any other man in American annals, one of the most unusual political battles on record is getting under way today. Gov. Ritchie, now completing his fourth term and 15 years in office, seeks reelection which would give him four more years in office and see him, at the age of 62, still in the governorship that he entered when he was only 43.

A lot has happened since Ritchie became Maryland's Governor on Janunary 1, 1920—back in those days Woodrow Wilson was president, Lindbergh was a boy just out of high school, Jess Willard had just lost his heavyweight crown and Mary Pickford and Theda Bara were the reigning movie queens.

With his long tenure as Governor as the outstanding issue, Gov. Ritchie is facing a fight for the Democratic nomination for the second time in his career. His chief opponent is Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore, hitherto one of Ritchie's close political allies, who insists that Ritchie has been Governor long enough.

The campaign will not come to a climax until the pimary in September, but Gov. Ritchie's opponents are already assailing him as a "dictator" and calling him "King Albert V of Maryland." And from out of the musty past is being dug up, as one of their chief weapons, Article 34 of the Maryland constitution of 1867, which says:

"A long continuance in the executive departments of power and trust is dangerous to liberty; a rotation, therefore, is one of the best securities of permanent freedom."

Singularly enough, Gov. Ritchie's father—the late Judge Albert Ritchie, of the Baltimore supreme bench—was a delegate to the convention at which this article was adopted and voted for it.

Gov. Ritchie's supporters insist, however, that this article is not an inhibition at all, and point to Ritchie's increasing majorities in each of his past elections as evidence that "permanent freedom" would not be imperiled by giving him another term. The people of Maryland are satisfied with their long-time chief executive, they assert, as evidenced by the fact that his majority soared from a bare 165 votes in 1919 to 40,000 in 1923, to 60,000 in 1926 and to 66,000 in 1930.

They also point out that the issue raised by Maryland's constitution was debated in Ritchie's campaign four years ago—after which he was elected by the largest majority he ever received.

Ritchie's foes, who admit that he has been far from a political tyrant, are basing their opposition on principle. They insist such long continuance in public office is in conflict with the fundamental ideas of democracy, and express fear that the State is setting a dangerous precedent whereby it might be easy for an unworthy man to perpetuate himself in office.

Election of a Governor to the United States Senate is usually regarded as a promotion, but Gov. Ritchie has not sought a Senate seat—which Maryland politicians say could be his this year for the asking.

"The reason I don't want to be Senator is that I like being Governor better," Ritchie explained. "My heart and my interest are bound up here. If I am taking any risk in running for Governor, then I had rather take that risk than the certainty of being elected Senator. I have shown this by running for Governor on two former occasions when I had the opportunity of running for the Senate."

In addition, said Gov. Ritchie, the next four years are certain to produce, in Maryland as elsewhere, grave economic problems that will challenge solution.

"For that reason," he added, "there will be opportunity for increased service and I welcome the opportunity to deal with these problems."

Only the White House, it seems, appeals to Gov. Ritchie more strongly than the historic old State House at Annapolis, rich in patriotic memories, where his office is almost directly over the old Senate cham-

With the Racing Bill Before Congress

District Turf Fans Strain At Barrier

Awaiting With Keen Anticipation the Starter's Shout "They're Off!"— Absent From Washington Since the Year 1908.

In the early days of the Republic Washingtonians and residents of the nearby States took their horse racing seriously. In those days the steeds were given real tests over four-mile courses.
Associated Press Photos.

THUNDERING hoofs swinging down the stretch will be a familiar scene in the Capital City again if the bill now before Congress to permit horse racing in the District of Columbia is written into the Nation's statute books. If the New Deal Congress continues the trend of liberalism that came with repeal, Washington will revive the sport that flourished here during the early days of the republic. For the turf followers of those days were just as ready to risk their bank roll on a favorite as a modern Kentuckian is to bet his shirt on a Kentucky-bred horse.

When Congress and George Washington located the District on the Potomac River, racing was inevitable, as the site was carved from the two chief horse-racing States of the Union, Virginia and Maryland.

The "sport of kings" began in America in the South, principally in these two colonies. Long before the Revolution wealthy Marylanders and Virginians were importing, breeding, and racing horses. The first horse race in America was held in Virginia. Fashion set its approval upon the racing meets. F. F. V.'s attended in wig and fur-below and coach-and-four. The early Governors of Maryland kept stables, and raced their horses against those of Virginia. Rivalry was always hot between the two sides of the Potomac.

George Washington ardently followed those turf events in both States. His elegant coach-and-four went long distances to meets. He was as moderate in betting as in other things, fortunately, for he usually lost. It was said that his loyalty to his own State made him bet too often on the Virginia horse. Evidently reliance was placed in his honesty, for at a race where he had one of his own horses entered he was made a judge. And his beautiful Magnolia was beaten.

About 1797, while the Capital was being built, some of the leading turfmen of the vicinity laid out a race track that was to be the scene of some famous contests. The track covered a part of what is now Lafayette Square. It was oval-shaped and crossed Pennsylvania avenue at Seventeenth street and Twentieth street. The judges' stand was on the line of F street.

Celebrated Race of 1798.

In 1798, two years before the Government moved to Washington, a celebrated race was run on this course. The Maryland horse was owned by Gen. Charles Ridgely, and the Virginia horse by Col. John Tayloe, who was soon to build and occupy Washington's then finest home, the Octagon House. The purse was 500 guineas. The distance was the usual one of that day—almost incredible to us now—four miles. And the time between heats was only half an hour. The race was exciting and the Virginia horse won. That was the last important race in the District before the Government moved from Philadelphia.

From that time the story of horse racing in Washington is long and spotty. After a brilliant half century the sport about died out. It was revived somewhat following the Civil War, but finally collapsed.

When President Adams moved into the unfinished White House, he could have seen from his windows a race to stir even his New England blood. Despite class restrictions, a Virginia tavern-keeper owned a swift thoroughbred called Lamplighter. The man challenged Gen. Ridgely for a race between Lamplighter and the general's famous Cincinnatus. The Marylander refused, explaining "I make matches only with gentlemen." Appeal was made to Col. Tayloe and soon, with the tavern-keeper supplying the horse and the colonel as the "gentleman," the race was run. Lamplighter won.

In 1802, the Washington Jockey Club was organized, and new racing grounds were established. The club included many of the leading citizens and some distinguished turfmen from other cities. Prominent among the local members were Col. Tayloe, William Thornton, one of the architects of the Capitol, and Gabriel Duvall, distinguished jurist who later became a justice of the United States Supreme Court.

The course was located on what is now Columbia road between Fourteenth and Sixteenth streets. It was 1-mile long and 50 feet wide. In the center were many booths with platforms on top for spectators. The seasons usually lasted about a week.

Dolly Madison, with four fine gray horses and a chariot, attended the races often. Cabinet members, legislators, judges—even the clergy—made their way out to the track in saddle, carriage, or hack. Congress had a way of finding serious occasion for adjournment in race-week.

Fashionable Washingtonians went in coach-and-four and liveried attendants. But the fashion and magnificence did not all belong to Washington. From Virginia and Maryland and far beyond came guests of distinction, and with equipages and retinues that made Washington's elite put their best foot foremost.

Women Well Represented.

At the race-course, the carriages were drawn up on rising ground just outside the oval track, while within it were hundreds of spectators upon the roofs of the booths, and thousands milling about on foot or on horseback.

Many of the spectators were women. The Washington race-course was peculiar in that respect, fully one-third of the crowd being of the fair sex. At one meeting this fact was advertised as an attractive feature of the event.

Some of the fastest horses of the day made some of their most famous runs there. Among the earliest of these was the sensational

While he ws a student of philosophy at Leipzig, Masaryk met Charlotte Garrigue, the American girl who became his wife.

Czecho-Slovakia's George Washington Rose to Fame From a Peasant's Hut

Through an American Girl's Devotion

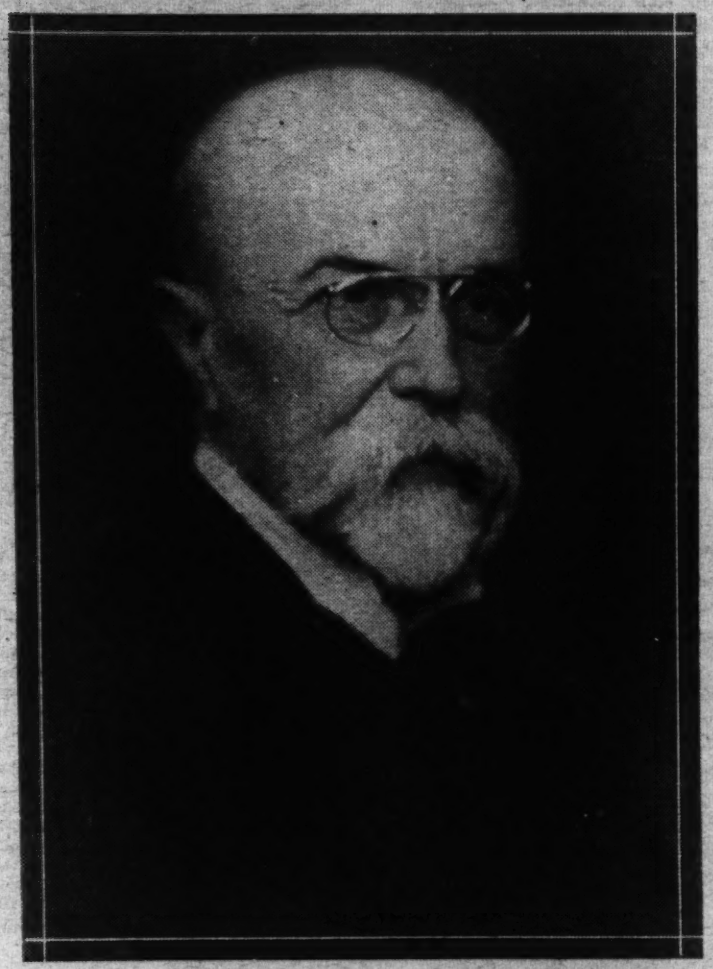
Together Tomas G. Masaryk and His Wife Carved a New Democracy Out of Europe's Shifting Sands.



Wide World.

Tomas Garrigue Masaryk, the 84-year-old President of Czecho-Slovakia, who began his third seven-year term recently.

WHEN 84-year-old Tomas Garrigue Masaryk, who rose from a peasant's hut to become the George Washington of central Europe, was honored with his third seven-year term as President of Czecho-Slovakia a little over a week ago, few persons remembered—or perhaps ever knew—the important part played in his career by his American wife and the chance love affair that started him on the road to world fame.

Since 1918 this kindly old philosopher-president has governed the republic that he created out of the inferno of the World War. In Germany, in Italy and on almost every side iron-like dictatorships have risen around him, but the democracy of 15,000,000 souls that he carved out of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire and liberated from three centuries of Hapsburg oppression stands as firm and as free today as ever.

In the long story of trial and triumph of this remarkable man there is no more interesting chapter than that which deals with his romance. It was Charlotte Garrigue, the American girl whom he met when he was a bearded young student of philosophy at Leipzig, who influenced his career as a liberator.

To Masaryk, who had been born the son of an illiterate coachman on an imperial Austrian estate, amid a society of masters and slaves, Charlotte Garrigue opened a vista of freedom for his oppressed people. A girl from sturdy American pioneer stock, instilled with the principles of liberty and equality, she proved his inspiration.

She labored with her husband throughout his stormy battles for the independence of his fellow Czechs, cheerfully suffered hardship and privation with him, endured persecution by Austrian spies and secret agents during the war, saw her daughter sentenced to be shot by an Austrian firing squad and finally, her health broken by her sacrifices, she paid for her loyalty with her life. She died in 1923, not long after her husband had been made President of the republic that their efforts had created.

President Masaryk has paid tribute to her many times in his writings and public addresses. But his greatest tribute was his taking of Charlotte Garrigue's name as his own —making it Tomas Garrigue Masaryk—an action symbolical of her deep influence on his life.

The events that led up to their marriage in 1878 form an unusual story.

Masaryk, who was continuing his studies at the University of Leipzig in the face of financial difficulties, had found lodging at a boarding house run by Madame Goering, a stout and kindly German woman. His aims set on obtaining a professorship in philosophy, he little dreamed then of becoming the liberator of his people and the founder of a nation.

One morning at breakfast Madame Goering was aflutter with excitement. A letter from America had just informed her that Charlotte Garrigue, a New York girl who had previously spent two years at the Goering home in Leipzig while studying music, was coming back for a brief visit.

Soon Charlotte Garrigue arrived. From the window of his tiny room, the serious-faced young student of philosophy watched her as she alighted from her cab and admired her beautiful, flashing smile and her confident and aristocratic manner. He had never taken much interest in girls before, but now his interest was aroused.

Not long after their introduction young Masaryk found they had a lot in common. She was interested in philosophy, too; singularly enough, they liked the same poets and musicians; also, with deep sympathy, she shared this young Czech's humiliation over the long oppression of his people by the Hapsburgs.

One day they arranged for an outing on a nearby river, inviting Madame Goering to accompany them. Their boat became trapped in the treacherous current and gave a sudden lurch with the result that Madame Goering, who was seated in the stern, was thrown overboard.

Quickly, young Masaryk stripped off his coat and dived to her rescue. He succeeded in bringing her safely to shore, but as a result of his sudden plunge into the chilly water he contracted a severe cold which threatened to develop into pneumonia.

For a week he was confined to his room under the care of a physician while Charlotte Garrigue nursed him back to health. They came to know each other better as they spent these hours together.

A few weeks later Charlotte left for America, pausing at Elgersburg to visit friends. Masaryk accompanied her to the station and saw her depart, but the attachment he had formed was too strong to be broken that easily. That night he wrote her a letter, proposing marriage.

Charlotte Garrigue's reply said neither yes nor no, but between the lines young Masaryk could read the answer. Encouraged, Masaryk hastened to Elgersburg to see her once more before she left for America. They became engaged with the understanding that the wedding would take place after he had completed his studies.

Charlotte went on to America, but shortly after her arrival Masaryk received a cablegram saying she had been seriously injured in a fall from a carriage and asking him to come at once. Scraping together all his meager savings, Masaryk hurried to Hamburg and purchased steerage passage on the first vessel sailing for New York.

Upon his arrival there he found her injuries were not as serious as had been feared. Again they discussed marriage and this time they decided to wed at once, with the result that the ceremony was performed the next day in the Garrigue home in Brooklyn.

This, the young Czech's first visit to America, set him dreaming of freedom for his oppressed people. Here was a Nation that had thrown off the yoke of oppression and grown great. The same, so the young patriot mused, could be done in his native land—and Charlotte Garrigue encouraged him in this belief.

With $750 that Charlotte's father supplied they bought passage for Europe and went to Vienna to begin a life of struggle. They lived in a tiny apartment in one of the poorest sections, while Masaryk sought work as a private tutor. Eventually, he got an assistant professorship in the University of Vienna.

When a new Czech University was founded at Prague four years later, Masaryk went there to become a professor. He quickly became a leading figure in the insitution and his fame and popularity as a lecturer began to spread.

Turning to politics, he organized the Young Czech's party in Prague and was elected to parliament in Vienna. There he continued to clamor for Czech independence from the Hapsburgs. Soon he became a national figure and began a lecture tour of every Czech town, advocating freedom of his people and a nation of their own.

At the height of this popularity, Masaryk never hesitated to champion unpopular causes in defense of truth. A historic instance was when he exposed a series of old manuscripts as forgeries, though they purported to portray the former greatness of the Czechs and had been sacred for years to the Czech people. For this he was branded as a "traitor" and threatened with expulsion from the university, but he insisted that a nation's honor could not be based on a lie and proved their falsity.

Later, Masaryk headed a national movement that won the right of every Czech citizen to vote and his wife, who had been active in this campaign, marched with him in the procession that celebrated the victory.

Reelected to parliament, he began to defy the Hapsburg rulers on an increasing scale.

Then, in 1914, the World War gave him opportunity for the action he had so long awaited. He organized Czechs who were opposed to fighting for the Austro-Hungarian Empire and, through secret agents sent to Russia, he arranged for their surrender in droves as they were sent against the Russians. These "captured" Czechs were soon fighting on the Russian side.

Leaving his wife and children in Prague, Masaryk went abroad to wage war against Austria. In Geneva he set up an agency for recruiting Czechs all over the world for the cause of Czech freedom.

His wife and family in Austria were hounded by government spies, his property was seized and confiscated and his friends arrested. His daughter, Alice, was arrested and sentenced to death by a firing squad, but later was reprieved. Mrs.

The following is the first of two articles debating the merits of student military training. The other side of the question will be presented in the next issue of The Post Magazine.

By HERBERT BRUCKER.

THIS article is dedicated to the thesis that military training in civilian schools, colleges, and training camps ought to be abolished. But the question can not be settled, I think, by talking of military training alone. The patriots and the pacifists have already argued the subject to the point of exhaustion for more than ten years without our being much the wiser.

Military training in the Reserve Officers Training Corps and Citizens Military Training Camps is to my mind only a fragment of a much larger question, namely: Are we going to direct the policies of the United States toward, or away from another major war?

Most of us do not seem to realize how near that war is. The world has gone back to the prewar organization of 1914. Our peace machinery, called into being by the deepest longings of a world that had learned what war really is, has practically gone dead. Throughout the centuries wars have come and gone and come again, to us as to other nations. And there is little in the way of an organization of peace to prevent the coming of another.

Of course, practically all nations have solemnly declared in the Kellogg Pact that they renounce war "as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another," and have agreed that settlement of all disputes among them "of whatever nature . . . they may be . . . shall never be sought except by pacific means."

It is, however, a bitter commentary upon what the United States itself thinks of that pledge that it continues military training and, more serious, passes an authorization for a larger fleet in the recent Vinson bill. "We have sacrificed our Navy for nothing," declared Rear Admiral Clark M. Woodward in Washington on Mother's Day. But, putting the Vinson bill and our existing fleet together, the sacrifice does not appear to have been complete. There is only one fleet in the world which surpasses ours in fact, and none in law. Fortunately, however—or is it unfortunately?—this country is not alone in promising peace and preparing for war.

Moreover the nations of today, unlike the kings of the past, rarely make war deliberately. Instead they adopt economic or political policies which gradually lead to a situation in which war, sooner or later, is inevitable. And if we desire an example, we need go no further than our own war-debt, tariff, and international cooperation policies in the years since the First World War.

It is this larger situation which leads American proponents of military training to preach its necessity. Former First Lieut. Donald G. Herring, arguing for continuance of the R. O. T. C. in a recent issue of the Princeton Alumni Weekly, opened its article with these words:

"War is stupid, wasteful, ugly, filthy, cruel, bestial, even sinful, if you like. A dictionary of opprobrious epithets is inadequate to describe it for the comprehension of those who have not been in it and of it. . . . Yet, call war every foul name you will, to the list of adjectives you must add 'inevitable.'"

If that were true, then indeed our R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. ought to be abolished—but abolished in favor of universal conscription on the European model, together with feverish mobilization of the entire country's resources for the bitter years to come. We ought, in sum, to make our own the doctrine of Adolf Hitler. I quote from page 715 of the unexpurgated German version of his book, "My Battle."

"Then indeed everything from the child's primer down to the latest newspaper, every theater and every movie, every poster and every billboard, must be brought into service of this single great mission, that the fightened prayer . . . 'Lord, make us free!' shall transform itself in the mind of the smallest boy into the glowing prayer: 'Almighty God, bless our arms in the days to come: . . . Lord, bless our battles!'"

If indeed war were inevitable, we ought to put our youth into brown shirts from kindergarten on, and march them in regiments through a schooling devoted chiefly to machine guns, shellfire, gas, barbed wire, and bombs. They should be made as one man to hail a leader far more of a tough guy than the smiling President Roosevelt announced himself to be when returning from his last vacation.

Instead of this, what do we have? The R. O. T. C., backbone of the citizens' military training system, is no nearer to modern war than the parade ground. Students are lured to take the courses by means of free uniforms and equipment, pay during their last two college years, horses to ride, and summer camps in which there are guns far more exciting to shoot off than Fourth of July firecrackers.

Even sex appeal is brought in, through co-ed sponsors and honorary colonels who lead the military ball. In fact, there is no more distressing aspect of the whole thing than the essential lie behind widely published news photos of pretty-20-year-old-Miss-so-and-so in her hon-

How Fast Will the Super-Planes of the Future Fly?

Man Struggles to Attain Enormous Speed In the Air

But to Do So, Experts Insist, He Must Find a Vehicle Faster Than Our Present Type Airplanes, Which Will Never Fly Beyond 500 Miles Per Hour.

By HARRIS B. HULL.

A LITTLE more than ten years ago a Frenchman named Sardi-Lecointe startled the world by flying an airplane 212.01 miles an hour. Old-timers shook their heads. Was there no limit at which these flying machines could travel?

A few months ago an Italian by the name of Francesco Agello hurled his racing plane through the air at 423.82 miles an hour. Lecointe's record had been doubled in a decade. Man had learned to fly just 100 per cent faster.

Aviation enthusiasts point with pride at this rate of increase. Ten years from now, many of them say, we will fly seven or eight hundred miles an hour, 20 years from now, even more. It is all very simple, for the aviation enthusiasts.

But science says, "No."

Experts of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics say it has been found there is a very definite limitation to what may be expected from airplanes as they are now constructed. And they add that the fastest planes being built in this country are rapidly approaching that limitation.

It has been found by exhaustive research into the principles of aerodynamics that the airplane of today may not hope to go much over 500 miles an hour.

At this speed, eight and a half miles a minute, the resistance of the air on the airplane becomes so great that it would be physically impossible to get an engine giving enough added horsepower to pull the airplane through the air at a greater speed.

These conclusions are based on the study of the airplane as it is known today. If greater speeds are to be attained present designs must be altered to reduce resistance-giving areas. That is, a mode of conveyance must be developed that resembles a projectile. The engines must be totaly inclosed, the wings must be short and stubby and there must be no auxiliary parts extending from the structure of the airplane while in flight such as landing gears. It is interesting to note that a number of the more advanced models of present-day airplanes are showing definite tendencies in this direction.

The large wings and the broad control surfaces of the airplanes we use today are not needed for actual flying. When the plane is in the air they slow the ship down a great deal, but they are needed to take off and land the airplane when the speed must be reduced to a certain safety point.

To cut down on resistance in the air, American manufacturers have designed planes in which the landing wheels are drawn into the airplane in flight. These ships have been in use for several years. As a matter of fact there is not a major airport in the country at which the sad predicament of some luckless pilot who forgot to lower his wheels is not a legend. It might be added that such forgetfulness rarely results in serious injury, only great embarrassment to the flier and considerable damage to the airplane.

The ingenious designer of a ship, in which the writer recently flew, equipped his plane with a siren and a whistle that went off automatically when a pilot throttled his motors down and prepared to land with the landing wheels of his airplane still in flying position.

The French, in their search for greater speeds, have gone into another field and are experimenting with a plane that retracts a part of the wing when in flight. This ship utilizes the large regular wings when taking off and landing. But once in the air it retracts a part of its wings, cutting the resistance to a minimum and thereby increasing flying speed.

Much has been written of late concerning the possibility of flying in the stratosphere, where air resistance is reduced to a minimum and where, according to many observers, terrific speeds will be reached, speeds unknown at the present time.

In the final analysis no man as yet has flown an airplane into the stratosphere. Consequently whatever is said in this regard is little more than conjecture. However, there are one or two tendencies that may be noted.

Disregarding the possibility of developing airplanes that will climb to these terrific heights and race through space safely, there is one very definite "if" in regard to stratosphere flying.

This concerns the human element. It is a moot question whether the human system would stand being hurled through the air at speeds in excess of 500 miles an hour. The pressure on the body in a turn would be terrific. It is the belief of many medical authorities that such a strain would render the individual unconscious, if it did not harm him more seriously.

In addition to this, a delicate supercharging system must be set up in the plane to maintain atmospheric pressure of the same degree that the individual is accustomed to on the ground. The air in the stratosphere is so rare that oxygen must be released in the plane to keep the occupants alive.

During the past few months American aviation has made encouraging strides in the field of speed flying. This is especially

"The U. S. A. Is in a Fool's Paradise Of Imagined Victory Over Bootlegging"

Prohibition's Frankenstein Monster Is Still Alive

So Declares Joseph H. Choate, Alcohol Control Administrator, Who Is Recruiting His Army of Dry Agents.

Post Staff Photos.

The bootlegger is still in business. This truck loaded with liquor on which no Government taxes were paid was confiscated recently.

By ROBERT CRUISE McMANUS.

ONE day last December, Edward P. Mulrooney, chairman of New York State's Alcoholic Beverage Control Board and former police commissioner of New York City, dropped into a Manhattan courtroom to witness the sentencing of the first bootlegger convicted since the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

His eyes ran over the spectators' benches. They were bristling with "mobsters," insolent bullies of the underworld who had grown rich and incredibly powerful by breaking the law during the days of prohibition. The event about to take place, Mulrooney well knew, was of crucial importance to these men. They were there to find out whether society was really preparing to turn on them, to drive them back into the rat holes whence they had come. As the judge prepared to pronounce sentence on the man before him, they edged forward. Would he give the limit of a two year "stretch" behind the bars?

"——and you are hereby sentenced to pay a fine of $10," droned the voice on the bench.

Mulrooney, stunned with disappointment, caught the instant expressions of relief on the faces of the outlaws in the audience. They nudged one another and jerked heads delightedly. An exultant smile ran from face to face.

That smile is still there.

"As concerns liquor," says Joseph H. Choate, director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, "the United States is living in a fool's paradise. We know that prohibition's Frankenstein monster, the bootlegger, is still with us, but we refuse to see its size and power, or to recognize what it has done to us. It seems probable . . . that the bootleggers are now turning out from their stills alone, not counting smugglings and alcohol divertings, a quantity of spirits which can not be much less, and may be more than we drank before prohibition."

The scholarly son of a great American ambassador and a talented amateur musician who practices his finger exercises every morning before breakfast, Mr. Choate seems a strangely anomalous figure to be flinging spears into gangdom's ranks. But his spears are sharp-edged, nevertheless. "A colossal criminal industry, necessarily highly organized," he says, "still exists and still exerts its debauching tendencies on every governmental agency."

And so, in tones ominously reminiscent of the prohibition era, he calls for more men to enforce the law. There are only 1,400 in the field now, chasing the same gangs which rode roughshod over the dry agents of the twenties. The lieutenants of Al Capone still reap their plunder in Chicago. The henchmen of Waxey Gordon overrun New Jersey. The old rum fleet, facing a Coast Guard, whose establishment has been stripped to a skeleton, is going into action once more.

There were 3,000 sacks of liquor seized in one haul off the New England Coast recently, which means that the old syndicates, or new ones just as large, are back in business. It takes capital to finance a 3,000-sack shipment.

Capital, confidence, that there is a good chance of beating the law, and a market. The buyers in that market are "law-abiding" citizens who are looking for cheap drinks. Bootleggers can sell them cheaper drinks than legitimate dealers, because State and Federal taxes increase the price of liquor from 50 to 100 per cent above its cost. And bootleggers pay no tax. A smuggler, for instance, saves $21 to $26 a case on whisky by bringing it in without the import duty.

There are eight major forms of post-repeal bootlegging. One is done by the moonshiner who distills his own alcohol from sugar or the like and sells it to the illicit manufacturer, or even direct to the consumer, for from $2 to $3.50 a five-gallon can. The manufacturer cuts it into "whisky" or "cordials." The consumer makes bathtub gin, even as of yore.

Another method of beating the tax-collector is known as "bootlegging a home-made blend under a fancy label." The bootlegger cuts alcohol, water and coloring matter into high-grade whisky purchased from legitimate sources. If his customer has a discriminating palate and a well-lined pocketbook, he will mix one part of whisky with three or four parts of half strength alcohol. If the customer is merely thirsty, the manufacturer mixes one part of whisky with nine or ten parts of diluted alcohol. Then he puts it up in pint bottles which he got from the bottle works—a fancy business these days—and pastes on a label which looks like that of a well-known brand. After that he peddles it around the neighborhood to his old customers, who were buying from him when the Eighteenth

It Takes Courage to Meet Affliction and Remain Strong

Minnesota's Blind Senator Schall Tells of His Battle With Darkness

Born in a Log Cabin, Raised on the Prairie, He Worked at Many Trades Before He Lost His Sight at 30 and Had to Begin Over Again.

By WILLIE SNOW ETHRIDGE.

HAVING arrived at his seat in the United States Senate on a rocky and circuitous route, blind, whip-tongued Senator Thomas D. Schall, of Minnesota, looks back, with satisfaction, no doubt, over the way today on the eve of his fifty-sixth birthday.

With excellent vision for the first 30 years of his life and no vision at all for the last 26, he has traveled from the log cabin in which he was born and the prairie sod shanty in which he spent part of his boyhood to his present law-making estate. He has come a long distance and he appreciates the fact.

As he lounges on week days in the deep, swivel chair of his big office in the Senate Building, with the best make of cigar clamped between his teeth, he gives the impression of being well pleased with his own personal life. His eyes give no hint of their sightlessness. The color of smoky caviar, they lie wide open and peaceful beneath overhanging brows. His tanned, furrowed face holds no bitterness; his long, prominent nose, no disdain and his straight, black hair, parted just off center, no sweeps of gray.

It is, nevertheless, a rather hard face, but then the Senator has had up until the last 20 years an exceedingly hard life. Before losing his sight, he had tried practically everything known to man. He had been a farm hand, a bootblack, a newsboy, an onion grower, a troubadour, a "chambermaid" in a saloon, a jockey, a bronco buster, an ice cream salesman, a professional baseball player, a vapor bath cabinet agent, an insurance salesman, a night clerk in a hotel, a promoter, a lawyer, a . . . well, what-have-you.

He was the tough of toughs. He could outbox anybody his size and plenty of people much larger. And he frequently did. He quotes a friend of those days as saying he packed a ton of dynamite in each fist and blasted every man who offered any back talk.

He could curse, too—and did. He knew all the common, ordinary curse words and a fine line of fancy ones. And, though, his blindness ended his boxing feats, it didn't stop his cursing. When he becomes angry, he hurls the invectives of those gutter days effectively.

He lost his sight in 1908 while practicing law in Minneapolis. One day he went to the little town of Fargo to try a case. When the court recessed for lunch he stepped into a store to buy a cigar. On the counter was an electric lighter intended for a six-volt battery; but that morning it had been connected with the city power in which the voltage was 220. As Mr. Schall lifted it up to light his cigar it exploded.

His eyes were burned and he was sent sprawling to the other side of the room. In a moment or two, he picked himself up and went out. He did not consider himself injured. Nevertheless objects looked dimly yellowish on the way back to the courthouse, and later, when he tried to read to the court, the type danced on the page. Walking to his hotel in the late afternoon, he ran into a post. Still he was not alarmed.

But during the next few weeks he became thoroughly frightened. The yellowish, waning light grew less and less, and at the end of three months darkness engulfed him.

"A year that was a century dragged out its weary days before I could accept the tragic truth that my sight was gone forever," he recounts. "Numberless times did I arise from a fitful sleep with the thought: 'What a horrible dream!' 'Now, thank God, I am awake.' Then when I tried to see, the unbearable blow would fall again."

He went from specialist to specialist, hoping something could be done. His small savings dwindled to nothing. His hope frayed out. His mind grew numb. He was in total darkness—mentally as well as physically. For 12 long months he d r i f t e d blindly.

Then he came out of the fog. He faced the fact that he was blind and would remain blind the rest of his days. There was no use whining about it; he had simply better knuckle down to rebuilding his life. He began again the practice of law.

It was the courage of his boyhood reasserting itself. He had wrestled with man-sized obstacles all of his youth and he knew better than most the rutty road of trouble. His father, who had been of a cultured line of Germans, died when he was 3, leaving him, his mother and two sisters penniless. His mother read and wrote with the greatest difficulty and had a pronunciation and manner of spelling all her own. She was fitted only for menial work at the most meager pay.

For years she dragged from place to place. She cooked in hotels and restaurants while the baby played with tin cans around the garbage pails. They led a gypsy life from Michigan to Missouri; from Missouri to Illinois; then to Little Rock, Ark.; then to Burlington, Iowa.

"In those early years I learned to turn to financial account what was abandoned by others," the Senator declared recently in talking about his life.

"When I was very young a foundry burned down in the town in which we were living. For weeks afterward I worked in the ashes to find bits of metal. These I carried to a junkman and sold for a few dollars."

With the help of this money, young Schall and his mother moved to Minnesota and settled on a farm in a little shanty made of sod. They had two blind horses to plow the land. They lived most frugally in summer and almost froze to death in winter. Their only fuel was hay which they twisted into ropes and burned in a small stove. During one dreadful blizzard when the hay gave out, he and his mother stayed in bed without food or water for days on end to keep from dying of the cold.

Their next stop was Fairmont, just across the Dakota line. Here Mrs. Schall got a job cooking in a restaurant and Tom, who had just had his eighth birthday, got a job as a farm hand. His hard-pressed mother made an arrangement for him to live with a man named Campbell and work for his food and bed. It was a tragic arrangement.

"The farmer was a Simon Legree," the Senator recounts. "I liked to work, but the more I labored, the more he demanded of me, enforcing his orders with a whip. Under his savage tutelage, I plowed and dragged in the fields with oxen as the motor power. I was able to gee and haw them as well as a man."

One morning the farmer ordered young Schall to yoke up the oxen. The boy could not lift the yoke. It was a heavy timber carved to fit the neck of the oxen and was far too heavy for him to pick up.

"You . . . little rat," the man yelled at the boy. "I'll give you some strength." And he proceeded to lash him with a black snake-whip which he always carried.

The boy tried again and again between lashings; but he could not get the yoke in position. Finally, the farmer left off beating him; but not before Tom had made up his mind to run away. He would join his mother, who was fifteen miles away. He started out one day; but the farmer overtook him when he had gone three miles and beat him all the way back.

He planned his next attempt more carefully. The first black night, he climbed out of his window, dropped softly to the ground and departed. When morning broke, he was about half-way to his mother.

"I had been following the railroad track all night," Senator Schall relates with vivid details, "but when light began to appear, I took to the tall grass on the side

Capital's Worst Crime Told In

The Odyssey

The Sinner's Punchinello, Late of Europe, and He's Said to Have Tossed His Infant Out the Window!

World on Sticks

Now comes Punchinello (just plain, mean, old hunch-backed Punch, then) and, because the baby must wail and bellow, throws it out the window. So, inevitably, will his old shrew, Judy, come inquiring and bang Punch with the broom. For a three-minute show, these ancient people are enough. If there is more time, or the children are numerous (he lies between his teeth, however, who says this show is only for those under, let us say, 21 . . .), it is likely the clown will come along to laugh at the domestic hubbub. His clamor will bring the officer, and Punch most assuredly will get clubbed. He will be sentenced to be hung, and the hangman will have the devil's own time getting the noose adjusted. Then up pops the devil, to catch the soul of Punch. And—but the sheriff, the doctor, the horse, the alligator have been left out. Where do they come in?

Anyhow, the story is always different, yet always essentially the same. It depends on how much time you have, how many "props," where you picked up the "patter," says P. J. Staunton. Staunton has been master of ceremonies of the sideshow of the Biggest Show on Earth for 35 years. There he has just three minutes with venerable Punch and Judy.

Last year Broadway demanded Staunton's patter and people-on-sticks on 80 different occasions, all the way from hospital appearances to Long Island social affairs.

Punch and his wife are from Italy, and the story of their mutations and migrations in the centuries since they first were the property of strolling players, is as ancient and honorable as these two characters themselves. The tale they tell in their wanderings has probably never been put down. It is passed, like the songs of the minnesingers, from mouth to mouth, and varies with the loquacity and invention of the performer. Staunton learned his lines and play from watching other "Punchmen," as they learned from those before them. So the tale travels, in every country in the world. Why does it not die? Because, whether you see Punch get walloped in this country, China, Madagascar, or Baluchistan, whether the operator speaks in your tongue or another, there is always Punch: he has been wicked to throw the baby out the window, and he is sure to be punished for it.

Chicken-House Row

A vast cloud of feathers rolled out from the rear of one of the stores down the alley behind the markets on Fourth street near Florida avenue northeast.

A chicken had escaped from a crate and flown in a feather barrel. One of the colored boy "pickers" attempted to capture the fowl and feathers flew.

Up the alley for a block are the shops of the chicken sellers. One may go in, pick his Sunday dinner "on the hoof," so to speak, and less than 5 minutes later walk out with the same chicken reduced to choice cuts and giblets.

The men who kill and dress the chickens are mostly expert colored boys and men. When an order comes in for 80 or 100 2-pound pullets, time counts. And the chickens get it—in the neck. After a half-minute of swishing about in a tub of boiling water, deft fingers begin to peel off the feathers. A few slaps here and there, a pull, one or two specific plucks—and there's your naked chicken.

Several of these shops cater also to Jewish trade. In the rear of such a place, the little "shochot," or "rabbi who kills the chickens," has his own separate killing and cleaning stall. Here with special cutlery, and in a specified manner, the chicken is made ready according to ancient Hebrew law. The chicken slain under his hand is not immersed in boiling water to remove its feathers, but is plucked dry. If a special order comes in to him, he has his helpers, too. One boy plucked 20 chickens dry in 23 minutes.

Dynasty Register

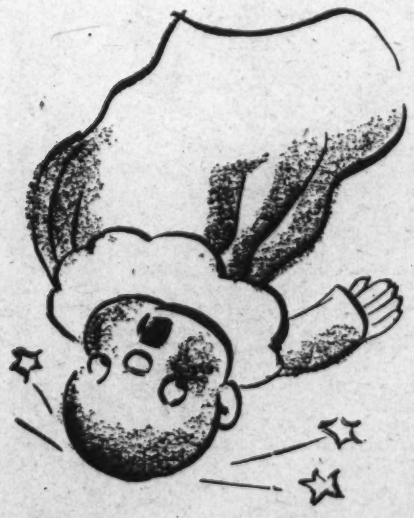
Gilman's, 627 Pennsylvania avenue, is reputedly the oldest drug store in Washington. Z. D. Gilman bought it from Seth J. Todd in 1843. Joseph D., father of the present proprietor, Charles Franzoni, came there to work in 1860.

Inside, the high, vaulted, ornamental, plaster-beamed ceiling is supported by continuing beams down the walls. Fancy grilled and twisted pillars panel the side walls. Extending to the rear rise cases of medical paraphernalia. They lead to the staircase up past the four floors of the building.

This stairway is an original feature of the store built, presumably, in the early years of the century. Confined to a small space, it has the form of an extended hogshead, rising three floors in an inclosed spiral. The center, hublike supporting pole is a full foot in diameter, notched at intervals corresponding to the winding trends which jut across to the boarded siding walls.

On the top floor the inclosing sides continue to the roof. The outside of this wall, between the top floor and ceiling, is interesting as having served through the years as a sort of register of names. Here, penciled on the plastered surface, can be found names and dates of the former owners and clerks, beginning with "Jos. D. Franzoni, Jan. 15, 1860," father of the present proprietor, and worker in the shop for half a century before his death. There is "Edw. L. Franzoni, July, 1876," brother of Joseph; "Fred Franzoni, August 4, 1893," brother of Charles, and the Charles who is now proprietor.

The names and dates of clerks who are now identified with stores of their own or who still fill prescriptions on the floors below are also there: T. A. Taylor, Frank P. Torbert, P. Collins and scores of others, undecipherable. The name "W. B. Bill," scrawled on the wall, stumped for a time all who were asked. Then it was discovered this was the name of one of the original of the line of cats always kept in the drug store for mousing. The present cat is a descendant of old "Bill."



"Peanut Joe," Perhaps . . .

Another year passes. "Old Joe," the dean of Washington's curbstone characters, is still with us.

"Joe" is that short little man, bent by the weight of some 85 years, seen gleaning the streets for tin-foil and other small valuables. At the bottom of an ankle-length overcoat his pants protrude and fall in layers which drag along the sidewalk. This foundation is topped off by a hat that seems to swallow his ears and face, leaving only a straggling mustache to dominate his face.

As he shuffles along the street he is pointed out as "the man that held Booth's horse." But notice how hushed this bit of information is given when Joe is within earshot. The slightest mention of this subject to Joe has the same effect as lighting the fuse of a firecracker. He sputters out the words, "They can't prove it," and in a flash he is off chasing the accuser down the street, waving his cane menacingly.

Before prohibition Giuseppe Ratto was known as "Cough Drop Joe." With his wooden box strapped in front of him, he made a familiar sight walking through the saloon and theater districts crying hoarsely his celebrated "Triple X Cough Drops." From the profits of this trade Joe managed to save about $300. This, he says, was later lost in a bad real estate investment.

With the advent of prohibition the cough-drop business had a decided slump. Joe branched into another field. This was the "collection business." Determining that there were too many valuable items of discard in streets and alleys, and having a good salvaging eye, Joe managed to build up what he terms as a "right good trade." When his finds are exceptional, a rickety old wagon is pulled to the scene.

In an alley just off D street, near Ninth, Joe has a heavily bolted room. It is here that he sorts and classifies his "finds" of the day in guarded secrecy. Not even close friends are admitted.

Whether "Old Joe" was the 16-year-old "Peanut Joe" who held Booth's horse back of Ford's Theater that night in 1865 has long been disputed. Some authorities name Joe Burroughs, who has since died. Joe's bid for the notoriety is largely substantiated by popular belief and his obvious distaste of the whole matter. To Joe it is an item of consequence and he still lives in fear that the Department of Justice will establish him as an accomplice of Booth.

Sawdust

Frederick H. Untiedt, patent lawyer and magician, got a late telephone message at his office recently. It caused him to rush to his car, throw it in high, and nose out Connecticut avenue at a speed guaranteed to draw attention. An intersection red light stopped him which the two motorcycle policemen trailing him had been unable to do. Knowing they awaited a fairy story, he told them the truth: "I am the father of a baby boy, weighs 9 pounds 9 ounces, so. . ." "So, congratulations," said the cops, shoving off. And the magician disappeared on out Connecticut. . . .

Now after 11 months and so many days of waiting, the impounded money has been released, and the new entrance to Arlington Cemetery just across the bridge will be opened. That is, in a few more months . . . Once there was no entrance: just the fence there. Then, almost a year ago, part of that fence was torn out and work began to make an entryway. Funds were impounded, and the work was never completed. The opening was boarded up and weeds clogged the gateway. Released recently, work has been begun again, and for the first time traffic will pass directly into the cemetery at that point. The new Memorial Entrance, as it will be called, will have bronze gates and a bronze fence flanking it for several feet back on either side.

The Scepter of Imperial Rome Fell to a Physical Weakling Known as an Idiot Until He Became

Claudius, the Stammering Emperor

Robert Graves, in "I, Claudius," Tells a Sterling Tale of the Claudians, Virtuous or Murderous, and Their Own Ugly Duckling Before the Praetorians Hailed Him As Caesar.

By THEODORE HALL.

TWO swallows don't make a summer. So I may be a bit premature in pointing to the signs of a mild classical revival in English writing.

There was that curious romanticist, T. E. Lawrence—and what more romantic in the quixotic sense than to change one's name to Shaw in midcareer, and thereby turn, oh, yes, really, into another person—there was Lawrence-Shaw sweetening his duties as an aircraftsman by doing a translation of the "Odyssey." That Lawrence-Shaw possessed the various merits of a linguist, a consummate military strategist, and the reputation (which would be only less marvelous than the fact) of being the sole man to have read every book in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, does not make his version the less flat, awkward, and, I think, unnecessary. But congenitally shy and no doubt sated with activity, he did turn to the pre-Christian Greeks.

And now, in "I, Claudius" (Smith & Haas, $3), we have another British scholar-warrior turning with equal fervor to the piping times of Rome from B. C. 41 to A. D. 41. These two nostalgic glances at classic times are not as separate as you might think—Lawrence-Shaw was aboard Graves' boat to the extent of reading the proofs of the present book, and the two squabbled pleasantly over the rendition of "assegai" for the Latin "framea."

Robert Graves, during the war, fought in the same regiment with Siegfried Sasson. But where Sassoon showed a violent bitterness in his verse, Graves' little volume, "Fairies and Fusiliers" (1917) was buoyant and almost gay. Four more books of verse followed this and two serious studies of the art of poetry. What we think of most quickly in connection with his name, however, is his remarkable war novel, "Good-by to All That." In a way, he is sounding that motto again and more effectively when he turns back to the Julian and Claudian families of Imperial Rome.

"I, Claudius," is the history of a confused, turbulent and bloody time beside which that of the notorious de' Medicis seems smooth as a mill pond. From Augustus Caesar, through the reigns of Tiberius and Caligula to the accession of Claudius may have been a period of success for the Roman arms, of prosperity for Roman citizens and provincials, of the adornment of empire with marble statuary and stable bureaucracy—but it was also a time of constant faction, intrigue, depravity, assassination and massacre.

To be sure, all this unpleasant liveliness was almost a family matter. The ruling family was astonishingly inbred, a matter which antiquarian geneticists might well look into. I quote this sentence from a large genealogical tree considerately included in the book (the point of view is that of Claudius):

"My granduncle Augustus married Clodia without issue, then married Scribonia, previously married to Cornelius Scipio, then married without issue my grandmother Livia, previously married to my grandfather Drusus Nero."

Such issue as resulted from these unions married and intermarried (seemingly as early as possible) until the resultant complexity all but equals that famous syllogism of the man who was his own grandfather. I didn't come within miles of understanding that chart wholly, and Graves, luckily enough, doesn't make it obligatory.

For it is only one merit of his putting the story in Claudius' mouth that we come on these people and know them personally before we unravel their total ancestry. They live before they fit into the diagram. And they live in the peculiarly vivid and immediate way which results from the method of first-hand narrative. Claudius, in location, at least, was in the thick of it all, a member of the family. But he had the especial advantage, for purposes of telling the story, of being in a real sense apart.

For Tiberius Claudius Drusus Nero Germanicus, grandnephew of the Emperor Augustus, nephew of the Emperor Tiberius, uncle of the Emperor Caligula, and himself the fourth of the Julian Emperors, was a physical weakling from birth. He stammered, limped and suffered from acute indigestion, aphasia and extreme nervousness all his life. Every one, save his close friends and a tutor or two, took him for an actual idiot. His mother despised him, and his grandmother, that frightful old tartar, Livia, would not even let him eat at her table. To the men of the family he was an object of cruel scorn or of none the less cruel pity. So Claudius took to the scholar's life, wrote histories of his ancestors, Etruria and Carthage, and kept as far as he could from the brawling of the mob or his noble relatives.

History has called him a mild and timid man, and more than a little ineffectual. It seems hard to reconcile that with the accomplishment of the Claudian aqueduct, or with the conquest of Mauretania and the great drive into Britain. And certainly for all his retiring nature and his politic truckling to the mad Caligula, and any other little demerits the reader may find, Graves shows him as one of the most decent and attractive men of the time. The view may be partial, it may be something of a fictitious invention, it may be based on subtler evidence than the encyclopedia gives, but the character of Claudius does appear consistent and inevitable.

A first glance at this book may be confusing—there are too many orotund Latin names, too many schemes and counter-schemes, too many threads of inference to be comfortable reading compared, say, with a simple one-plot domestic novel. But a little patience with an unusual genre will be rewarded.

Here is Livia, ensnaring Augustus when she was 17, keeping a tight hold on him all his long life and almost as tight a hold on Tiberius, poisoning her husband's descendants right and left when they thwarted her plans, and dying at 86 in the secure hope of being deified. Nor is that the strangest side of her—she could be hand in glove with Augustus for decades, and then murder him. In a frank moment she once gave Claudius the reason. Her own father was Augustus' mortal enemy.

Here is Germanicus, brother to Claudius, a brave commander against the Teutons. He died in the East by witchcraft—or rather, by the intrigue of his own son, Caligula, scarcely 12. Here is "Little Boot" himself, grown up to incredible profligacy as Emperor. Here are Cassius, the only officer to come back from the Teutoberg Forest after the massacre of Varus' legions; Hermann, the Teuton chief (Arminius, still a national hero in Germany—as late as 1875 a statue was erected to him); Livy and Pollio, the historians, ridiculing each other's works. Here are Senators, matrons, praetors, gladiators, wastrels, slaves and petty politicians. Here is the whole glittering procession of imperial Rome.

Claudius didn't want the Emperorship. When the praetorian guard hoisted him, protesting shrilly, onto their shoulders, and he had accepted the acclaim with as good grace as he could muster, he wasn't thinking of the scepter of the Caesars. He was thinking—Now I can get audiences for my public readings!

With that regard for the signs of essential humanity, Graves has written a sterling piece of history.

Washington's National Experts Confirm His Warning That the Tendency to 'One-Child Families' and the Restriction of Immigration Menace Our Survival.

By GERALD G. GROSS.

THE AMERICAN people are headed for extinction. Yes, extinction—and nothing can stop the catastrophe, unless perchance it be heeding the good advice of a sincere well-wisher, one Benito Mussolini, of Rome, Italy.

Mr. Mussolini, who is a profound student of the movements of races and what is apt to be the future of them, issued his warning to Americans only last week, after casting a glance or two over the vital statistics. He foresaw with alarm, the crumbling of their skyscrapers, the collapse of their trade and their renown, the disruption of their peaceful agricultural pursuits, and their final ignominious defeat and dissolution before the onrushing hordes of prolific Orientals.

Il Duce naturally did not sign the "Cassandra" message to the U. S. A., but it appeared in his Popolo d' Italia, the newspaper in which most important utterances are attributed to him. It is safe to say that Mussolini was behind it.

The article predicted a day when Japanese tearooms will be more common along the Hudson River than monumental dwellings, and when some gentleman of the yellow race may occupy the White House in Washington.

America's birth rate is on the tobboggan, Mussolini pointed out. And her gates are virtually closed to immigration. What then, is to become of her?

A good many Americans, taking Mussolini seriously, will want the answer to that question.

It is not so easy to furnish it.

But a rapid canvass of the leading American authorities is by no means as reassuring as one might have expected it to be. None of them quite pooh-pooh Mussolini's conclusions. And many of the most authoritative of all came out flat-footedly to declare that he is right.

Dr. Louis I. Dublin, statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; Dr. Joseph A. Hill, Dr. Leon E. Truesdell, and Dr. Timothy Murphy, all of the U. S. Census Bureau; Dr. O. E. Baker, senior agricultural economist in the Department of Agriculture; Dr. E. Dana Durand, chief economist of the Tariff Commission and formerly Director of the Census, and Dr. Isador Lubin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, all unite in viewing the future of these United States with a certain degree of alarm.

Some of them are slightly more optimistic than others, but none would go to the length of a contradiction of Mussolini.

"His statement is food for serious thought," declared Dr. Dublin.

"The American birth and death rates may be equal in about 20 years," said Dr. Baker. Beyond that point, the Nation would take the down grade. Others agreed that "stationary population will be reached about 1960, and that from then on there will probably follow a slow decline."

Of course, the death rate has fallen, too, going to a record low of 10.9 in 1932, but this trend, however, great a testimonial it may be to promoters of public health, gives scant encouragement to the scholars who see in the not distant future a United States run by old men and women.

"For years," writes Dr. Dublin in a report prepared especially for use in this article, "we in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. have been calling the attention of the American people to the fact that our population was gradually moving to the wrong side of the ledger of natural increase. By 1930 our reproductive rate was already insufficient to balance our mortality. In other words, for four years, we have been really in the red so far as population growth is concerned, although this does not show on the surface.

"The population is still apparently increasing, but we have pointed out that this increase in numbers results from a temporary excess in the proportion of our population at the reproductive ages. This excess is due to the heavy immigration of the past, which has now ceased, and to the high birth rates of the previous generation. Actually, our reproductive rate is now so low that when the children now born arrive at the age of parenthood, they will not be sufficient in number and fecundity to replace their parent generation, nor even themselves.

"A good deal of the existing situation as regards population growth simply reflects the present economic distress," Dr. Dublin continues. "Young people are not marrying. In some States, the marriage rates have fallen to absurdly low levels. Several million marriages have been postponed since the beginning of the depression, and that accounts for a large part of the recent decrease in births. But even for many years prior to the depression the tendency toward declining birth rates was already in evidence. The fact is that the small family of one or two children has become the fashion among the large part of our American people.

"If the birth rate continues to fall, the natural consequence will be for the population to become visibly stationary at an even earlier date than we have predicted, and from that time on the population will fall steadily to a figure possibly as low as 75 million. That is obviously what Premier Mussolini has in mind.

"The exact consequences of such a trend are difficult to forecast. One possibility is that our present immigration laws would be amended if there were any grave danger of a serious population decline.

"Frankly, I do not see our skyscrapers beginning to crumble. What I believe is more likely to happen is that the American people, once they become aware of the implications in their present low reproduction, will awaken to their obligation and take more seriously their duty to reproduce themselves. They will probably give consideration to measures which will make for an increased birth rate.

"Possibly exemptions from taxation and subventions to the family for every additional child may be resorted to. A solution of our major economic difficulties should go a long way toward encouraging larger families. Certainly from now on, there should be no encouragement to those thoughtless, though vociferous groups, who are still urging birth control as a panacea for our National ills. If they should have their way, and the American people were truly indifferent to their National destiny, then all that Premier Mussolini predicts might very well happen."

Dr. Dublin believes economic revival will go a long way toward bolstering the dwindling birth rate, by improving the standard of living, giving married folks greater financial security so that they can afford to have babies, &c., and his opinion is shared by Dr. Hill and Dr. Truesdell, who are chiefs of statistical research and population statistics, respectively, in the Census Bureau, and Dr. Lubin.

Like thousands of others in American homes, this boy is the only child in the family. The prevailing tendency to small families in the United States, and the virtual closing of our gates to immigrants, have elicited from Premier Mussolini of Italy the gloomy prophecy America's population is in peril of extinction.

Dr. Baker, whom these others respect as a brilliant pessimist, is not so sure that as the United States becomes smaller, people will prosper through the reduction of competition and after a while turn their thoughts once more to rearing families, thus allowing the condition to correct itself, as Dr. Lubin insists will be the case.

Wide World.

Benito Mussolini, Premier of Italy, has long been an advocate of large families. This picture of Il Duce, his wife and their four children shows that he sets his subjects a good example.

Il Duce, a student of the subject, shows serious concern over the falling birth-rate and has issued a friendly warning that it is high time the American people wake up to their impending calamity. Furthermore, leading authorities in this country are taking his predictions seriously. Many agree with him.

Concerned chiefly with the fate of the farmer, which is inseparably linked with that of the urbanite, Dr. Baker has not changed one iota from his gloomy outlook of last June when he wrote:

"It seems to be assumed, particularly by some sociologists, that a decreasing population would result in a higher standard of living, because of the tendency to concentrate agricultural production on the better lands, mineral production on the richer deposits, and industrial production in the more efficient factories. It is my opinion that these hopes, with reference to the United States, will prove illusory, particularly if the decline in population is rapid."

He says now, as he said then, that shrinkage in population will be reflected in empty storerooms, empty houses, abandoned farmhouses and factories. Private enterprise will be stunted and greater dependence will be laid on the Federal Government to build houses, for real estate companies won't be willing to construct and maintain properties when there aren't sufficient numbers to occupy them, he predicts.

Grass will grow in the streets and the skyscrapers will crumble, to all practical purposes if not literally, if Dr. Baker's prophecy is fulfilled. Having fewer children, perhaps none at all, people will put less money in the banks. Sight of so many vacant stores and houses and factories will have a depressing effect. Even greater psychological injury will be caused by the plethora of old folks. (While fewer babies are being born, persons now alive are living longer and each succeeding year is expected to show a larger number of persons in their sixties and seventies.)

Dr. Baker does not mean all this will come to pass if we reach a stationary population and hold it. On the contrary, he believes this would have a good effect. But a decline is bound to follow after the peak is reached, he fears, and it is the decline which will produce that decay which Il Duce seems so concerned about.

Dr. Truesdell subscribes to the policy of governmental annuities or bonuses to encourage childbearing, but Dr. Baker is of the opinion such inducements would be impracticable.

Dr. Durand refuses to become alarmed over the decline, while admitting it is a challenging problem.

Speculation on America's future, if the present birth trend persists, offers no end of fantastic possibilities. Will children become a rarity? Undertakers may soon experience their biggest business in history while obstetricians are idle. The aged would prevail, so there would be greater conservations in government and commerce. But where would you find enough young men to fight a war? Thousands of public schools and universities would shut their doors and what would become of the teachers? What would happen to the thousands in the dairy industry (already the consumption of milk has declined by an alarming percentage because babies are on the wane?)

The Old Timer Talks Again of

When I Was a Boy

How He Rode Down the Andes in a Handcar, and Sailed Around Cape Horn in a Heavy Sea.

This is the sixth of a series of boyhood recollections. The ages covered are 6 to 21 years and the time just after the Civil War.

By THE OLD-TIMER.

WHEN I was a boy——

Soon after our return to Callao from Valparaiso father took up for a trip on the Aroya Railroad to Matucana, 12,000 feet above sea level, the terminal at that time. My memory of that ride centers upon this sight: We gazed out a car window at a tunnel the train soon would enter, then up the sheer face of the mountainside at two black holes, one above the other, the uppermost seeming to be much the smaller. We were told that they were tunnels and the train would wind around and around the mountain, in a spiral ascent, upon a ledge which had been formed by blasting; then in half an hour would pierce the mountain through the lower tunnel and a half-hour later would pierce it again through the upper one. Later, when again in Peru, I learned more about this feat of engineering, said to have been the most marvelous in railway construction, and also about the man who conceived and carried forward the work of building this iron roadway from ocean level over the Andean range.

• • • •

Three events at Matucana registered in my brain cells. My father said that the landlady at the little inn had the smallest waist he had ever seen; he marveled that she did not break in two when bending over. We were served the most delicious doughnuts I had tasted since leaving grandmother's. My mother became so ill in the rarefied air that father chartered a handcar to take us back to Lima.

• • • •

I rode down the Andes on a handcar and my memory of the wild ride is a blur. Drawn by gravitation only, we were 45 minutes making the descent: the train had covered the distance in 5½ hours. Mother often spoke of the wonders seen during that dash from an Andrean peak to sea level. I would much rather have been at La Punta on my awkward roller skates, a novelty of that year's invention.

• • • •

We were again at sea, again on the steamship Oroya, listening to Commodore Jim's stories, hearing his "music-box" whistle, watching the machinery which turned the paddle wheels and enjoying ourselves on deck until late at night in that most peaceful sector of the Pacific.

• • • •

It would be a three days' wait for the Pacific mail liner Acapulco, on which we would journey from Aspinwall to New York and we remained in Panama until sailing day. Father announced that he would take me to a bull fight. Mother protested. He laughed and promised she would not shudder when hearing my account of the encounter. He led me to the Grand Plaza, where a bull was tethered by a long rope. At 3 o'clock the "fight" began. Dandies of Panama ran toward the bull, pointing canes or umbrellas. None got near enough to make a touch because the bull was an active animal and nimbly charged to right and left, before and behind. Several of the Panamanians stumbled and fell down, then rolled over and over to get out of the way. It having rained that morning, they were sorry sights when they scrambled to their feet and disappeared among the crowd. The bull seemed to have a merry time of it. I am certain he laughed when a dandy dressed in all white tumbled into a pool of muddy water.

• • • •

We were homeward bound, on the last lap of ocean travel. Again, off Cape Hatteras, we ran into a gale and I heard that the Acapulco was making heavy weather of it. But my eldest sister and I did not care. We were having lots of fun in the companionway, sliding on cushions from one side to the other as the ship rolled.

• • • •

We were back in the old home town, welcomed with hugs, kisses, innumerable questions, solicitious inquiries. I missed not seeing Shep run to the front gate. But Polly was there. He flapped his wings and never permitted a lull in the conversation.

• • • •

The second evening, when father came to the house from downtown, is one I never can forget. His face was chalk white, not only his nostrils but his lips were twitching. He went upstairs immediately and mother followed. We children kept very quiet and the adults talked in subdued tones. It was fully an hour before mother came down, then returned with tea and toast. No questions were asked. Everyone sensed a tragedy. Father did not reappear until morning, when he left for Cleveland where he remained a week. That day I gained an inkling of what had happened, but I did not fully understand until many years later, when I heard the details from his own lips.

• • • •

It was his plan, when in the United States this time, to join the Grand Army of the Republic. He had read in newspapers from home of its organization and rapid growth and he heartily approved its principles. As several of the "boys" of his former command were in business in the village where we children were born he had decided to join the post which only recently had been organized. With this purpose in view he had gone downtown that evening and entered the G. A. R. hall on the second floor above the shoe store. What happened is best told in his own words, as nearly as I can remember them.

• • • •

"The boys were glad to see me. Some seized my hands, others clapped me on the back, I was being led to the center of the hall when I was brought to a sudden halt by seeing, seated in a chair on the platform—the seat of honor as commander of the post—a man whom I thought was dead. He must also have thought me dead, and when he saw me in the flesh he appeared to shrivel as he sank back in his chair. I turned and hurried from the hall, not daring to trust myself near him." Then father told me why.

• • • •

"Our battery was under heavy fire. Every man was needed to serve the guns and repulse the charge of an infantry regiment. I saw one of our men vault onto a horse's back, bend over and cut the tugs which held the animal to a caisson. I shouted a warning. He struck the horse with a club and started at a gallop away from the enemy. A panic of desertion might follow this act. I shot the fellow in the buttock and he rolled to the ground. That is the man who was commander of the G. A. R. post which I had hoped to join."

"I rode down the Andes on a handcar, and my memory of that wild ride is a blur. Drawn by gravitation only, we were 45 minutes making the descent; the train had covered the distance in 5½ hours."

farthest from the road. Soon Campbell came along looking for me, as I knew he would; but I saw him first and hid in the grass until he had passed. Then I scampered into a nearby wheat field and hid in the middle of it. And there I stayed, without anything to eat or drink until it was dark again. The next forenoon, I reached mother."

Tom's next few years were devoted to blacking shoes, selling papers and farming.

By the time he was 12 years old, he had not spent a day in school. Then an event happened that changed everything—except his hardships.

He went one day to the small town of Wheaton to see his mother who was living there. He wore old, ragged clothes several sizes too big for him and as he walked up the main street some boys laughed at him. He pitched into them and was succeeding excellently in carrying all before him when the constable arrived. The constable said he would have to lock him up for disturbing the peace. But then the village teacher arrived and said he should be made to go to school instead of to jail. The constable agreed.

And the young roughneck lapped up everything he was taught. He loved books from his first introduction to them. In four years he made the grammar grades. But he didn't give all his time to studying. He couldn't. He still had his living to make. Before entering high school he tried out several more fields of industry. He rode race horses, broke broncos in the far West, sold meat in a butcher shop, worked in a brick yard and played baseball at so much a game.

Then he was ready for high school. After careful consideration he picked out a town with a good school and a prosperous saloon. He got a room free over the saloon with the understanding that he was to get up early every morning and sweep out before he went to school.

He entered the university in the fall of 1897. And from that day on his life was filled with oratorical victories, baseball achievements and other happy accomplishments. During even his freshman year he walked away with all the oratorical honors.

From the University of Hamline he went to the University of Minnesota. He decided to make the change because, for one thing, the winners of declamatory contests at the University of Minnesota received cash awards—and, as usual, he needed money.

He studied law in addition to his literary subjects and when he was graduated he received two degrees —A. B. and LL. D. Immediately after his graduation he opened an office in Minneapolis and began the practice of law.

He had practiced for only a few years when the accident happened which caused the loss of his sight.

In 1914 he accepted the Progressive congressional nomination from the Tenth District of Minnesota, after it had been offered to several other people, and was elected. He served five terms in the House. Then he ran for the Senate and was elected. He is now ending his twentieth year in Congress.

Though he declares he is a Progressive, he hates everything about the New Deal. His language is caustic and bitter. "He calls the National Recovery Act, the National Ruin Act. "It is just a racket," he blurts. President Franklin Roosevelt to him is "Frankenstein" Roosevelt and Gen. Hugh Johnson is "Hooey" Johnson. The recovery program is the "discovery" program.

Mr. Schall loves to swim, to walk and to be read to. He has never learned Braille, so has to have everything read to him. He [illegible] listen to detective stories hour after hour. He doesn't sleep very well at night and frequently dozes while listening to crime yarns; but the reading must go on. He spends many evenings listening to the radio.

He likes to remodel houses. He remodeled the one he and his family (he and Mrs. Schall have three children) are living in now at Berwyn, Md. It was an old, delapidated farm house when he bought it. He has added rooms and wings and other improvements until it is almost a mansion. He also designed the swimming pool and many of the outbuildings.

So tomorrow when he celebrates his fifty-sixth birthday, he will, no doubt, look about him with his mind's eye and find life, in spite of his blindness and the New Deal, full and sweet.

Science Finds New Way to Remove Germ Cause and Activate Dormant Roots to Grow New Hair.

(Read Free Offer)

A germ called "Flask Bacilla of Unna" gets deep into the scalp skin in many cases of abnormal hair deficiency, causing a most dangerous type of dandruff. It clogs up pores and hair follicles, causing itchy scalp, falling hair and prevents dormant hair roots (papilla) from growing new hair. The germ is seldom suspected. Washing and shampooing and use of tonics, ointments and lotions don't remove the cause. They merely cleanse and treat the surface and roll off the outer skin like water rolls off the back of a duck. No wonder baldness is increasing.

Now a new discovery enables people who have dandruff, falling hair, thin hair and baldness to harmlessly remove the congested thin outer layer of scalp skin. This permits opened pores to breathe in air, sunshine and absorb a penetrating, stimulating scalp-food to activate the smothered, dormant hair roots and grow new hair. It is the most sensational discovery in the history of falling hair and baldness. It is all explained in a new treatise called "GROW HAIR," showing "anatomy of your hair" and tells what to do. The Talking Sparrow MURDERS

By Darwin L. Teilhet

The Story So Far.

It was called the Talking Sparrow Murder because the big industrialist, Kohlmann, just before he was shot in a Heidelberg street, had accosted Tatson, an American engineer, and said he heard a sparrow on the pavement talking. Tatson, under suspicion, was forbidden to leave Heidelberg. Carlson, connected with the same German factory as Tatson, offered to help him escape, but Tatson wished to take with him a fascinating but mysterious singing girl named Mischa. Following her suspicious disappearance from the Dolphin Inn after Taubek, Nazi leader, had been murdered there, Mischa appeared suddenly in Tatson's pension.

Now let Tatson himself go on with the story:

FRIDAY, April 6, was a terrible day. It was terrible because it was a day entirely lost as far as solving the Kohlmann mystery was concerned. One of the new spraying tanks I had installed burst at 6 o'clock in the morning. I had to go out to the plant at once. I slipped a note under Mischa's door, explaining that I had to help Carlson and asking her to stay in her room.

I didn't get back until 6 that night. Mischa was in the chair with her feet on the bed when I entered.

"I was worried about you," I said.

"I've kept to my room amusing myself with anagrams."

"Wish that was all I'd had to do," I answered.

The morning of Saturday, April 7, was overcast. The straggling morning sunlight came down gloomily through the pines as Kresch and I drove up the long, winding lane from the Schloss road to Kohlmann's massive residence to search the place again. The shades were down in all the windows. Kresch stopped the police car in front of the weathered griffins guarding the red steps leading to the entrance. I followed him to the door, where he inserted a key into the old-fashioned lock.

Kohlmann's study was located in the east wing next to the library. There was an old-fashioned roll-top desk across from a glass-inclosed shell and curio cabinet, a long table running the length of the room, a map of the Rhine region above the desk and several red-backed chairs with dust collecting on the parchment seats.

Precision Marked Search.

Kresch started to go through the study with all the preciseness of a comic-strip wife going through her husband's pockets.

"His lawyers have all his papers," Kresch said in his mushy voice from over his shoulder. "Nothing is supposed to be here." He lifted up the four pictures on the walls. Rugs, chairs, even the windows, were scrutinized.

"It's a funny old desk, isn't it? Looks like it belongs in a museum."

"It's a Korlinback," he said casually. "They used to be popular 50 years ago."

The library covered most of the remaining space in the east wing. Three walls of books 10 feet high were spread out before us. There were—to make a rough estimate—1,500 to 2,000 books. He looked at all the books and then to me. "You can start at the lower end. The cases are unlocked. Don't shake the books; open them up. If a paper is hidden it might stick; so you will have to look carefully, please."

By 3:30, when Kresch waddled back into the library with a limp black cigar smoldering between his lips, I had gone through 500 or 600 books. He stood watching me for a while and then said: "You found nothing? Neither have I, and I assure you that I have gone through the house with very good care. We can go now."

"I've still got the rest of this section to do."

"There is no need to do more, Herr Tat-zohn. One of my men spent an entire day going through the books."

I sat down in the car and he lit another cigar. "It was kind of you to have me go through the library again."

He patted my arm. "Do not be angry, Herr Tat-zohn. I wished to show you it is not so easy as you may have thought when you come to me and sternly say, 'Herr Polizeidirektor Kresch, we must examine more.'"

I laughed with him; he was such a fat, rubbery sort of person that it was difficult to be angry at him for very long. "It wasn't so bad. The books, thank God, weren't dusty, though many were as old as that desk of Kohmann's. You know, I'd like to take a desk like that back to the States with me. What did you say it was?"

He settled into his seat. "A Korlinback."

Important Clew Found.

He pressed the starter. The car backed around an iron maiden holding an umbrella. "They used to be popular because Korlinback built a drawer which was supposed to be secret, and often the owners would forget where it was and called—Gott! Do you suppose"—— The car bumped to a halt. Kresch flowed over the seat and ran back into the house.

He rolled up the top, pushed his head into the cavernous opening, felt past a series of pigeonholes and there was a rusty creaking as the entire lower top of the desk sprung upward several inches. He looked at me with a slightly foolish expression. Underneath the desk top there was a scrap of paper.

It was a muddy, water-stained piece of paper. On it were words, roughly penciled and blurred. We sat down at the table and stared at it.

"Looks like 'Come corner Plokenstrasse. Hurry along. Walther,' doesn't it? What the 'I am,' at the right, and all the words which have been blurred mean is difficult to decide. We'll take it back to the Polizeiamt. There it can be put under a microscope."

A scrawled note gave the clew to the disappearance of Walther Kohlmann.

"The signature—that's the son, isn't it?"

"I am afraid so." He placed the note between a ply of tissue paper and inserted it into his leather pocketbook. "We must return to the office at once."

By 4:30 they had finished making photostatic copies of the note and had examined it under a microscope. Finally Kresch said: "The word 'alone' does not belong after the word 'hurry.' It is part of the sentence above beginning with 'I am.' Machbaum, could you see any more of it under the microscope?"

Words Written Over.

"A number of words have apparently been written over each other, Herr Polizeidirektor. The sentence is so blurred and washed away by water that it is impossible to make out the meaning. The son must have been drunk when he wrote it."

"Or doped," stated Kresch. "How many photostatic copies did you make? Five? Good. Send two copies to Berlin at once. We must find out the rest of that sentence. The Berlin authorities have the equipment. They can put it under the black light; that should make the letters distinct."

As soon as I entered my room Mischa slipped in, shut the door and triiumphantly placed a pile of newspapers on my bed. "I was at the library all afternoon. One place Herr Kresch's police do not come to." She stopped and looked at me. "What's the matter?"

"Nothing I didn't expect, Mischa. Today's the seventh, and Kresch just informed me that I would be held until July."

She sat down beside me. "I'm sorry."

"It's just bad for you, Mischa."

"You didn't find anything?"

Everything Goes Wrong.

"Why, yes, we did. Here's a photostatic copy. I borrowed it while Kresch was admiring a lovely sunset. But what good it does either you or me, I don't know. Oh, damn it, Mischa! Why does everything have to go wrong?"

She examined the photostatic copy, frowned, abruptly swung over to her pile of newspapers, turned around and said with repressed excitement, "Did you know that three others besides Herr Kohlmann were killed on March 27, and that of the three, one of them was named 'Schmidt'?"

"Look." She opened up a copy of the 'Heidelberger Blatter' on the bed. "Here is the death list for March 27. Except for Herr Kohlmann there were only three other deaths from unnatural causes—murders, in another word." She pointed to the black type: "W. M. Rosenkrantz, shot by persons unknown in the Gesterplatz; Fredlich Jacobson, beaten to death by persons unknown and found at the Neckarstrasse early in the morning." "Now read the third one."

"Newspaper Vendor Shot in Schlossalee," it said.

"Late this afternoon Paul Schmidt, sixteen, employed by the 'Heidelberger Blatter' as news vendor in the Plockenstrasse, was discovered shot to death in the Schlossalee. Frau Schmidt is unable to account for her son's death. It is assumed that this is one more example of Communistic terrorism attempting to intimidate the 'Heidelberger Blatter.'"

"That is interesting," I said.

Newsboy as Messenger?

"Supposing Walther Kohlmann had been captured and he had managed to escape and was hiding near the Plockenstrasse. You have the note he sent his father. How could he have sent it? Wouldn't the newsboy working there be the most logical one to take the message? The newsboy must have reached the father, but he was killed before he could return."

"You make things too simple, Mischa. If Walther could have escaped—even supposing he had been captured—why shouldn't he have gone directly to the police?"

She walked under the light and held the photostat at arm's length, screwing up her eyes. "He wrote it in the dark! That explains why all the words run together. It's ruled paper—and here's the date—March 20—and the page number. He tore it out of a pocket calendar. He's been gone since March 20, too! Where would Herr Walther be in the dark during the afternoon and yet near enough the Plockenstrasse to call the newsboy?"

"In an inclosed auto, perhaps, and he slipped the note out of the door. But why didn't he send the note to the police? You can't answer that——"

"I've answered it already to my own satisfaction. The police are Nazi-controlled even in Heidelberg. And wasn't Herr Taubek a Nazi?"

Not Safe Outside.

"Taubek's out of it—he was killed."

"Not when the note was written. If Herr Walther was taken by one of Herr Taubek's men, wouldn't he try to get in touch with his father instead of with more Nazis?"

"I don't know. It's past 6 and I'm hungry. I'll go out and bring something back for us to eat."

"I'll go with you."

"And let the police find you?"

"They won't recognize me in the dark. I'll meet you in ten minutes down at the end of the Gaisbergstrasse. Then the landlady won't be suspicious."

The band was playing the first summer concert in the park at the corner of the Leopoldstrasse and the Gaisbergstrasse. The lights were strung from the white frilled bandstand to the restaurant. Students with round bandboxes on their clipped heads were stiffly strolling arm in arm, bowing jerkily to other students who filed down the opposite walks. The black depth of the mountain sloped up and formed a velvet background, the scent of flowers and deep pines was in the air, the music was lively and Mischa sauntered up and without any prelminary greeting declared that she wanted to eat in there.

Off to a Cinema.

"There are too many Schutzmanner around here. Why don't we go to the Drei Raben?"

When we had finished our dinner and the waiter had departed with the empty bottle of the noble Laubenheimer, she glanced at her watch. "It's not 8 yet. Let's go to the cinema. There's a picture playing at the Kapitol I want to see."

"Do you realize, young woman, that you are supposed to be the object of the most intensive search?"

"You think the police will examine every girl who walks into a cinema?" she asked when we reached the street. "Will you go to the cinema with me? Or shall I go alone?"

We walked down the Hauptstrasse to the Kapitol Theater. We bought places in the balcony. First they showed a Pat und Patecheon comedy imported from Sweden. Then a title—in German, of course—"Cuckoldry at Carmel" flashed on the screen, with a credit line, "Directed by Peder Dreishen." I felt Mischa lean forward in her seat. . . .

The first show ended a little after 10. "Let's see it again," Mischa whispered; so we remained in our seats until 12 before going out into the cool night. We wandered down along the Neckar and for a long time leaned over the stone wall and watched the river go by. The stars were sprinkled above us in little patches where they shone through the torn drifts of fog coming in across the plain from the Rhine.

Names Gave Clew.

"I noticed the name of the director," I said, throwing a stone into the water and listening to the soft splash. "He did a good job, too."

"I didn't think you would notice."

"'Dreishen' and 'Dryshenzoff' aren't so different, are they? Especially when you care to see the picture two times. But it's none of my business. Shall we go back? Besides, Kresch showed me a photograph of you and a man—the man's name was 'Peder.'"

"Peder's my brother. He has been over there three years. This was his first picture, and just before Herr Kohlmann was killed Peder wrote me and said he could manage a contract if I'd come to Hollywood. That's why I must get out of Germany."

We reached the Hauptstrasse. I started to call a taxi when Mischa pulled my arm and said, "The Plockenstrasse should be deserted by now. I want to go back that way and see where Herr Kohlmann heard your talking sparrow. I have an idea."

"I have an idea we'd better get back to our pension. It's past 1."

"I'm going on to the Plockenstrasse."

At Scene of Murder.

Ten minutes later we were alone on the corner of the Plockenstrasse, where an old man had thought he had heard a sparrow talk. The night breeze came around us, sweeping down from the mountains behind Heidelberg, and the fog spread a dark veil below the stars. There was a deathly quiet in the street, broken only by a soft rippling sound which gave an undertone to the night.

"Something's wrong," Mischa declared. "There's no mud—no pools here. And you said it hadn't rained."

"How do you know that the news vendor didn't get the note wet? This street isn't a place for you to be past midnight, Mischa. Shall we go?"

She walked to the curb without replying. Then, as if she were thinking aloud: "This is the building from where Herr Kohlmann was shot. The bullet went from the window across the street to Herr Kohlmann. All that's clear. Herr Kohlmann came alone because he thought his son ordered him to come alone. But where was the son all the time? Where? Where? Could he have been hidden in any of the buildings?"

There was a small hotel, now shadowy and indistinct, on the corner of the street we had just crossed over from. The glass portico over the hotel door glistened dully from the lamp light. The hotel had been closed for several months.

Buildings Were Examined.

"Kresch examined the hotel?" she asked.

"He went through all the buildings on both sides of Plockenstrasse."

"I hope he went through them more carefully than he searched Herr Kohlmann's house."

She walked up the steps to peer through the cracked glass of the door into the dense blackness of the hotel. I watched the street, ready to draw back into the safety of the shadows should any one come. From the Hauptstrasse we could hear the infrequent rumble of an automobile. "Have you a match?" she called softly. "Look at this."

I snapped my lighter. She pointed to the brass plate on the door: Handelshof.

"Taubek owned this hotel!" A flame of excitement ran through her voice. "Last February he told me he was buying a hotel in Heidelberg. I've been trying to remember the name. I'm sure this is it."

She tried the door. It was locked. We sat down on the steps and lighted cigarettes. She shivered.

"Cold?"

"No. It's not that."

I walked over to the corner. Faint undertones of sound as of water flowing met my ear. I stepped into the street and examined the curbing, running my fingers over the rusty, iron grill set into the side of the stone where it opened into the sewer which ran from the mountains, draining into the Neckar. I got up and went back to Mischa. I asked her if she would mind going back to the pension alone.

"Found something?"

"I don't know. Probably not. But I'm going into the hotel tonight and it would be too dangerous to have you here if I were caught."

"I won't go," she said resolutely. "Besides, if the hotel's locked how will you get in?"

"Probably can't."

Mischa remained at the opening of the alley. I was to be gone for 10 minutes. If she saw any one coming she was to run back to the rear entrance and warn me. The alley was littered and in the darkness I almost stumbled. The first floor was, as nearly as I could judge, 10 feet from the ground. Too high to break into the windows. I had a few matches besides my lighter and by burning two matches I found the rear entrance, a crooked, warped door set into the brick wall.

Wood Was Soft.

The wood surrounding the lock was rotted. The door opened with a soft, fluttery crackling as the lock gave. I flicked the lighter, hoping the fluid would last long enough to find the entrance to the cellars because they, I felt, contained the answer to all the mystery of the talking sparrow—if there ever had been a talking sparrow. The idea concerning the cellars had suddenly come to me while listening to the running of the sewer. What had seemed fantastic suddenly seemed simple, horribly simple.

The dismal flicker of the lighter was overwhelmed by the thick blackness. I was in the kitchen. A long, shambling stove filled up one side of the room and next to the stove was another door. The smell was as thick and oppressing as the darkness and as I pushed through the door and saw a black tunnel spread below me, two squeaking rats scurried across my feet.

The steps creaked during the descent into the cellar. By the feel the floor was brick and slippery with slime or moss or both. I passed through several empty rooms of the cellar—or at least they appeared empty from the little that could be seen with the lighter. I wanted to go toward the street. The lighter illuminated part of the curving surface of a wine barrel, and then of another. There was the odor of souring wine. I felt soft wriggling bodies press against my legs. A film pressed against my eyes and I wiped the spider's web from my face.

Furry Animal Scratched.

I was anxious to return to Mischa. I half started to turn back, decided I might as well finish my examination and cautiously stuck my legs through an opening, a hole in the floor, evidently leading to a sort of subcellar, and felt what was apparently a ladder. Starting downward a projecting beam knocked the lighter from my hand. The drop of light fell, blazed on the dirt floor ten feet below and extinguished itself suddenly. I held to the ladder, blackness rushed over and around me, something with fur on it touched my fingers. When I struck at the fur the thing leaped away squeaking and scratching.

Hanging on the ladder with one hand, feeling into space with the other, my fingers ran along the wall at my right and encountered a jagged opening or hole in the wall. The opening was a foot or so from the ladder. With my feet still on the rungs of the ladder, I leaned over to the right and managed to shove my head and shoulders through the opening.

The sound of running water came more clearly. It was, apparently, not far below me; the broken stones of the opening into the stone wall were damp and covered with slime. By craning my neck upwards I would see, far above, a series of black lines, varied by those of a more grayish hue—the grillwork of the opening into the curbing on the Plockenstrasse street. It was up the sewer walls that I was looking. I pulled myself further into the opening, resting on my stomach, and in leaning I disarranged the ladder.

I felt it totter. I tried to draw back, but only saved myself from falling by grasping the stones. I manged to pull myself across the ledge of the opening. The ladder thudded somewhere behind me. From where I was perched I could not reach the opening through which I had come from the first cellar.

Called to Girl.

I tried to call, very gently, to Mischa, but no sound came except the continued flowing of the water. The Plockenstrasse is drained by a system of sewers built centuries ago. These sewers, about three feet in diameter, run down from the mountains twelve or fifteen feet underground. Near the corner of every block is an opening under the curbing for the water to drain down into the sewer. The shaft leading up from the sewer to the curbing is three or four feet in circumference at the bottom of the sewer—I am speaking from the knowledge gained during this terrible night—and gradually narrows to about a foot and a half when it approaches the curbing.

When the hotel had been built, a retaining wall had been placed in the second cellar to prevent the water from seeping in. As time had slid by, the moisture had loosened the mortar and a hole had been made in the wall; the hole opening directly into the shaft from the sewer to the street level. And I was trying to maintain myself in the cramped space of this hole, with the water of the sewer below me, my feet dangling in the shaft, and the curbing and any chances for escape beyond reach above my head.

Iron Rung Found.

The stones were so sharp that I was forced to move. A piece of the ledge broke off and splashed below me. Very carefully I put one hand forward, reaching for the other side of the round stone wall of the shaft, trying to find a projection of some kind for support, and touched what appeared to be an iron rung imbedded in the circular wall tapering up to the street. Feeling up and below the first rung, I felt other rungs. They had evidently been inserted to descend to the sewer. It might be possible to climb up them to the Plockenstrasse, and if the grating could be pushed out, to escape.

As soon as my foot rested on one of the rungs the mortar came loose and I slipped and dropped. Perhaps I fell five feet or six feet. The thick oily water, heavy and laden with a sickening cold filth, rolled up around me and broke the shock of my fall as I smashed into it. For a moment my head was under. Then I came up, struggling for a foothold on the slippery surface.

I felt for the nearest rung. Its rusty surface rasped my hand. I made a cautious step forward. I didn't want to slip. Not into the dark torrent of water. My foot pressed against something soft. At first I don't think I was so greatly frightened. At least, I wasn't any more frightened than when I had traversed the cellars. But when my foot pressed into that soft, mushy heap lying so quietly underneath the water. I had to press tightly against the narrow walls and fight a surge of panic.

Body Found at Last.

I shut my eyes. I opened them. But as long as I didn't look up toward the faint streaks of gray made by the gratings it didn't make much difference whether my eyes were closed or open. That was the terrible part of it, I guess—the absence of light. Panic swelled up into my throat. I called out once or twice, but my cry dangled around my lips and the water came ever colder around my body and gripped it in a closer hold. The air was so foul that, breathing through my mouth, I could taste it.

I wavered, splashed forward against the wall and almost slipped on the thing stretched out under the water. I knew what it was. But I had to prove it. I took a deep breath and retched as a consequence. I plunged my left hand down. The black water coiled and gurgled, lapping my face and ears. It didn't take long. My hand touched the soggy clothes and then moved over a substance that felt like loose jelly. When I touched the hair I forgot my footing.

The water poured over me. I came out of it, spitting and slawing for the walls. It was a body I had felt. Some one else had fallen down into the sewer. Some one else had tried to escape. Some one else had slowly gone down into the blackness and thick water. Fighting recurrent waves of nausea, I called, "Mischa! Mischa!"

Watch Proves Identity.

Some two hours after my escape from the sewer, Kresch was saying, "The smell is far from pleasant. Will you hurry, please, Herr Doktor? We shall have the entire neighborhood aroused in another 10 minutes.

The doctor bent over the white canvas and reluctantly examined the remnants of clothing containing the decomposed mass.

A head came up from the sewer opening. "Herr Polizeidirecktor Kresch," it said, "here is a watch. There is a name on it."

Kresch took the watch. On the back was engraved:

"To Walther Edrich Kohlmann on his eighteenth birthday."

Kresch and I got into the front seat of his car.

"What I should be pleased to know, Herr Tatzohn," asked Kresch, "is how you happened to relate the incident of the talking sparrow with the possibility that Walther Kohlmann was in the sewer——"

"The note gave me the first idea. It had been wet. Obviously Walther Kohlmann had written it in the dark."

The police car stopped in front of my pension. I climbed out.

Kresch took out two of his cigars, started to offer me one of them and then withdrew it, saying, "I think so soon after tonight you will not want a cigar of this strength," put it back in his pocket and lit the other.

"If the news vendors had only released the gratings, Walther would have escaped"

Newsstand Above Sewer.

Kresch puffed the cigar and rested his arms on the wheel. Walther undoubtedly told the boy to take the note to his father first. Then, as we know, he was not allowed to return. Just now, when we examined the rungs leading down into the sewer, we found that two rungs, five or six feet below the gratings, were broken off."

"I didn't think of that. Walther managed to climb up to the gratings with the note he'd written, shoved the note through——"

"Exactly," quietly agreed Kresch. He succeeded in attracting the attention of the news vendor. "See here." He reached into his inner coat pocket and drew out two rough sketches he had made of the sewer and hotel. He held the drawings underneath the dash light. "Here you can see the newsstand is almost directly above the gratings. The passersby on the sidewalk were too far from the edge of the curb to notice anything; and those across the street were, of course, much too far away."

Voice Was Weak.

"You're right." I took the first diagram. "The news vendor, looking down, would have the best opportunity to see the fluttering note. But the rungs pulled loose before Herr Kohlmann arrived, and Walther dropped down to the bottom of the sewer."

"We can reconstruct this much, Herr Tat-zohn: Walther was held in the lower cellar of the hotel. He managed to break through his ropes, and when he found there was no way out of the lower cellar, he made an attempt to escape by the way of the sewer. When his father came, Walther tried to cry out, but Walther's voice was so weak and the father was so ill with anxiety that he confused his son's voice with the sparrow." Kresch rubbed his ragged ear. "No—that cannot be right. Walther would have fallen back into the sewer by the time his father would arrive. Walther did not even know when his father arrived. Gott! And the father would be standing on the sidewallk. Somewhere my deductions are wrong."

"No they aren't! I remember now. Look at this diagram. Herr Kohlmann was standing on the sidewalk—yes. But when he accosted me, I remember he said, 'My hat blew off and as I was bending down——'"

"Ach-zo? Now you remember? After I struggle so hard with the problem! The Herr bends down to pick up his hat. Yes? Walther is at the bottom of the sewer, hurt by his fall, weakly calling—what did Herr Kohlmann say the sparrow said?"

Why Was He Taken?

"Help! I'm caught!".

"There. It explains itself. I did not want to believe that the father should arrive just as his son was crying for help. But the son had been crying for help for a long time. The wind blows off the hat and the father bends down near the sewer and hears the dying words of his son . . . words so weak, so faint, that no one else hears them. Why? Because no one else is near enough!"

"To go back to Walther's capture—they must have kept him in the hotel all during the time he was supposed to be away," I stated slowly. "But listen! Why was he taken? What has Walther Kohlmann to do with Geigen, except that both wanted to buy our plant?"

"Did you know," asked Kresch, taking the cigar out of his mouth, "that Herr Taubek was trying to blackmail Fraulein Elaine Edrich? We found letters in his office which prove it; furthermore, we found two letters addressed to him by Herr Geigen threatening Herr Taubek if he sent any more letters."

"Fraulein Edrich told me Taubek was blackmailing her, or trying to," I admitted.

"You know who owned the hotel where Herr Walther was hidden?"

"Yes, Taubek——"

Kresch leaned forward and I realized my mistake too late. "Ach-zo! And how did you know?"

There wasn't anything I could say.

Kresch Offers Help.

"Were you down in the sewer?"

"Yes."

"How did you go down into it?"

I lied the best I could, but I knew he didn't believe me.

"This is what puzzles me, Herr Tat-zohn. If some one, not you of course, did break into the hotel, did get into the sewer through the lower cellar, accidentally broke the ladder and found himself unable to return except through the sewer—if the gratings were still shut, how did he get out? You see, that is all very important. Because if he got out, so could, then, Walther Kohlmann."

"There would be only one solution. If such a thing happened, then whoever was in the sewer would require assistance to get out. He couldn't get out alone. He couldn't get out unless he shouted for help, and we know Walther Kohlmann must have been too weak to shout for help after his father and the news vendor were killed."

Kresch pressed on the starter. motor growled and spit and commenced to turn over. "So you or Fraulein Mischa found out that the news vendor had been killed, Herr Tat-zohn?"

Kresch shifted into low and shoved down the clutch. "Herr Tat-zohn," his voice was gruff, "you have helped me twice. Let me help you. If you see Fraulein Dryshenzoff, tell her not to risk going into any more libraries. Let her stay hidden where she is for the next few weeks. It is impossible for me to withdraw the murder charge, but with conditions as they are—I think it would be preferable to have the Fraulein outside of a prison controlled by our young men inflamed against those of non-Aryan blood. Do you understand?"

"I understand."

Mischa Was Frightened.

I watched the car until it had vanished down the Gaisbergstrasse, then went silently up the stairs and lightly tapped on Mischa's door.

She opened it immediately. "Kresch found him?"

"It was Walther. They discovered his watch."

"I can't sleep. Come and talk to me. Every time I shut my eyes I can see you down in that hole. No—don't sit over there, please. I want you near me. What if I hadn't heard you?"

She put her face against mine.

"It's over now," I said, at last. "There's no more of it."

"I waited and waited. You didn't come. I was going to the Polizeiamt to get help when I heard your voice from very far away. Then I looked down the gratings and could see something white and blurred and it was your face."

"I was frightened, too, Mischa."

"If you could only manage to leave Heidelberg."

"Kresch suspects where you are. He's shrewder than I thought."

She started up.

"Don't worry. He wants you to stay here. He's not a Nazi" . . . and I repeated Kresch's words. "Now get some sleep. I'll come back in a couple of hours and wake you."

Letter from Carlson.

The alarm had been set for eight. When it finished its tinkling jig, I sleepily reached for the phone to put through a call for Carlson, at the Europaischeof. He, if any one could, would be able to help us escape. In this emergency I did not think it was too much to ask of him, despite the fact that he'd given his promise to Kresch that I wouldn't escape.

The clerk said that Herr Carlson had driven to Baden-Baden late yesterday evening after leaving a note for me at the desk. The clerk was just going to send it over to my pension when I called. He would have it over in ten minutes. He apologized for not sending it sooner, but Herr Carlson had requested him not to disturb me too early.

I had bathed and dressed when the note from Carlson arrived:

Dear Bill: Sat. 8 p. m.

Telephoned you three times, but you were out. Wanted you to come with me to Baden-Baden. Tagenbruck—he used to buy our equipment and is a good friend of mine—was in today. He's influential in S. Rhineland politics. Told him how you are being held because of Kohlmann mess. Tagenbruck says he can get you through—thinks he can. I've decided it's necessary to break my promise to Kresch and get you out. I can fix it with Kresch after you're gone. Tagenbruck says they may hold you indefinitely. I'm going down with T. to Baden-Baden. I'll be back in Heidelberg Monday. T. says it'll take him all of Sunday to get things fixed with the men he knows to get you across—if he can do it. Get your stuff packed and ready to leave. I'll meet you at your pension Monday—probably around 10 or 11. Wish you luck. HENRY.

The telephone clamored for attention. "Herr Tatzohn? This is Fedl. The Herr Polizeidirektor wishes you to come to the Polizeiamt at once."

Mischa opened her eyes and was wideawake. "What is it?"

"The Polizeiamt just called. I have to go there. I don't know what's up. You'd better get dressed; get out of here at once. Start walking slowly down the end of the Gaisbergstrasse. When you get out into the country wait for me. I'll pick you up in my Opel. I don't want them to find you here. You undertsand?"

"Of course."

Kresch was in his office.

"Herr Tatzohn, Herr Geigen escaped early this morning. Two of the guards were bribed. We have located one. He has confessed. Fraulein Edrich bribed them. She has disappeared with Herr Geigen. It is extremely awkward. Fraulein Dryschenzoff is at your pension?"

His shattering stream of announcements concerning the escape of Geigen converged into the impact of a projectile. His question produced the effect of the explosion of the projectile. Kresch knew Mischa was hiding in the pension. No use lying.

"Yes."

"Where are the letters she took?"

I didn't want Kresch to know the letters were still at the inn until I had a chance to examine them and determine whether there was anything damaging to Mischa in them. "She didn't take them."

"She must have. If I don't get those letters I'll have to arrest her. You wouldn't want her given over to the Mannheim Nazis?"

"Give me until tomorrow. I'll question her again. I'll have your letters by tomorrow. You can arrest her if I don't."

"Tomorrow, then. Remember."

"Tomorrow. That's all you wanted me for?"

"No."

Written Report Given.

He handed me a two-page typewritten report:

Summary of report to Polizeidirektor Kresch from Berlin Central Office re Kohlmann Murder; speculations S. N. la Roc, implicated in murder.

1. Berlin headquarters contacted Paris Surete. Surete obtained information from Pelletier et Cie., brokers re speculations of one M. S. N. la Roc. They said La Roc dealt with Pelletier et Cie. on three occasions. First, in December, he bought heavily into the Arveaun Cie. Second, in January, he sold out Arveaun Cie. with small profit, bought heavily into the Societe Louis Vuitton.

Note: Societe Louis Vuitton controls Vuitton patents for making artificial silk from wood cellulose. According to Pelletier et Cie., they advised their clients' process would not go into operation until 1st of April. Clients could not sell until 1st of April. Then, if process was successful, profit opportunities great.

2. In March news announced that Arveaun Cie. receive new government contracts. Pelletier et Cie.

"Herr Tatzon," said Kresch, "Herr Geigen escaped early this morning."

wrote their clients. La Roc entered third speculation in Arveaun Cie.

3. Arveaun Cie announced bankrupt. La Roc loses third speculation.

"Well," I handed the report back to him, "what does that mean?"

"It explains the telegrams La Roc sent."

"What have the telegrams to do with your sending for me?"

"You don't know?"

I shook my head.

Geigen Is Wanted.

He rapidly lit a cigar, puffed several times and swallowed. "Nothing then, that's all. Don't forget the letters. Tomorrow."

Mischa would be waiting for me and growing anxious. I picked up my hat. "I won't have to stay in Heidelberg any longer now that Geigen has escaped? It shows he's guilty."

"We shall need you as a witness," he replied too genially.

"How long does that mean I'll have to stay?"

"Not long. Until August. Ja—only until August. That is not long. Once we find Herr Geigen I suspect we shall have our final solution. Then the trial comes at once. It will not be long." He said as an afterthought to me: "You will please be careful. Until Herr Geigen is found it will be dangerous for you. For you and Herr Carlson. I have telephoned his hotel to warn him——"

"Warn him!"

"Yes," he said, placidly, the cigar going successfully again. "But they tell me he is in Baden-Baden. I've wired to Baden-Baden to try to locate him."

"I have no available men to guard either of you. All our men at present are operating under the Nazi storm troops. I have only myself and six men for all of Heidelberg. I can not watch over you or Herr Carlson." He ushered me gently out of the door. "So you see, until Herr Geigen is found it will be necessary for you to be very careful. When he was in jail he constantly made threats against you and Herr Carlson. Herr Geigen, in his desperation, can be very dangerous."

Waiting for Carlson.

Mischa was not at the end of the Gaisbergstrasse. I drove back a block to the Alter Franziskaner. The waiter who came up grinned knowingly when I asked him if he had seen a small, dark-haired girl. He said that she had gone down the road half an hour ago.

Two kilometers down the road I came up with her. She climbed in. I headed the car down the next lane, telling her that Geigen had escaped with Elaine. "And I can't get hold of Carlson, in Baden-Baden, Mischa. I telephoned the Europaischerhof. They said there had been four calls for Carlson. If Geigen called there and found where he was and when he'd return—I don't like it, Mischa. There's nothing I can do until I can see Carlson and warn him."

"Shall we go back? There's nothing we can do until Carlson gets back. Then, God willing, we'll be out of Heidelberg and Germany tomorrow."

"Let's don't go back. . . . I want to stay out here where it's green and sunny."

I drove back to Heidelberg about dark. I dreaded going to the inn to find the letters and I wanted to get it over with as soon as possible. I stopped a block away from the pension to let Mischa go in alone.

"Don't drive too fast," she said quietly and walked away.

Arrived at the Inn.

I went down the street, across the Leopoldstrasse, toward the outskirts of the city. I hid the Opel under the dense shadows of an old apple tree a quarter of a mile from the inn and walked to it.

The back entrance was locked and boarded up. So were the windows on either side. I pressed close to the rough brick sides as I walked stealthily along the side walls.

The front door was locked, so was one of the front shuttered windows, but it moved slightly when I tried it.

It wasn't difficult to find the door to Mischa's room. I went to the bed, stood up on it and felt for the picture. It was as Mischa had said. The letters were there. I pulled them out from behind the frame and turned around, bobbing up and down on the bed. The blinding light struck me in the eyes. A voice said, "Let me have the letters."

I couldn't see the man behind the flashlight. But I knew that voice. It was Geigen's.

The bed springs gave under my feet. I had no time to put the letters in my pocket. The flashlight came closer.

The voice had a cold pain in it. "Herr Tatson, I have a gun in my hand. Let me have the letters."

I got to the edge of the bed. My eyes became more adjusted to the glare. I could see the stone white of Geigen's face through the bright flare. I could see the glitter of the thing he had in his hand.

"Let me have the letters," he repeated in that curiously dead voice, "or I will shoot."

Fight Was On.

"He backed away to the door. "Put them down on the floor and go behind the bed. I will have no hesitancy in shooting, Herr Tatson. You have caused me this trouble. I will give you 5 seconds to put the letters on the floor."

The cold harsh voice started to count. "One—two—three——"

At "four" I jumped to the floor and dropped the letters. I went back behind the bed.

Geigen held his flashlight on me. He bent down to pick them up.

I shoved him away and stood up. I was going to force him to give me those letters, but when I started to touch him he wasn't there and something exploded against my chin and then I went down on the floor. I remember the sickening feeling of helplessness as I tried to get up and couldn't.

He waited there for a moment with one of his fists drawn back. I managed to get up. To get my arms around him. The light from the electric torch lying on the rug was enough to enable him to work his way back to the door and his fists came piledriving and smashing into me.

Mad Chase Follows.

I think he was hurt. His breath came in tearing gasps and he turned away and started to run downstairs as I took hold of the side of the door and pulled myself up. There wasn't time for me to get the gun.

I stumbled toward the stairs. I couldn't run down them so I jumped. We hit at the middle of the stairs, rolled down into the front room and this time I wasn't going to let him get up. I got him around the throat. But I couldn't get away from his fists. I had to let go to cover my face. I got up and I followed after him.

This time I was so exhausted that I couldn't stop him when he stepped into my arms and got me in the stomach.

He was going out of the window when I stood up. He was running down the road when I was able to climb through the opening and catch up with him. He didn't have time to turn. I went down on him heavily. He didn't rise from the road. The road was covered with small stones. I guess when he fell he struck one of the stones and was stunned, as he wasn't the kind to give up.

It was hard to keep from falling down there beside him. I thrust my hand into his pocket and reached the letters. An automobile started up from around a curve or from behind a stone wall. The lights lifted up from back of the trees. I stuffed the letters into my pocket and started to go down to the Opel, but I couldn't make it and the sound of the automobile drew nearer.

Woman's Voice Heard.

I stumbled down through the ditch, crawled up into the bushes and lay down. I couldn't go any farther. The lights of the car swept the road and the car moved slowly. It stopped. Then there were quick footsteps and I could hear a woman's voice, very low and frightened. "Otto! Oh Gott!" it went up in a cry of terror. "Otto!"

Then Geigen's voice came through the doors closing around my head.

"Elaine! He got . . . the letters. He was with Taubek."

"Can you get up?"

"He got them."

I've never head a voice so tender. "It doesn't make any difference, darling. Try to get up."

"He . . . was . . . too big. Too big. I couldn't knock him . . . out, Elaine."

But Geigen was wrong All the stars had gone out of the sky and the sharp twigs of the bushes no longer speared into my back.

Some one was shaking me. I opened one eye. The other one wouldn't open.

"What is it, my Herr?" asked the voice between me and the cold gray sky. "Have you been robbed?"

The peasant was a good fellow. He helped me to my Opel. He said he had come out to work his fields and found me there. He helped me to start the car.

Back at Home.

Ten minutes later I was going up the front steps of the pension, past Mischa's room to my own.

I sat down on the bed, put my head in my hands, being careful not to touch the raw side of my face.

My door opened. Closed.

Mischa's cross voice came to me. "You certainly made enough noise coming up the stairs. You were just going to have a beer and——"

She stopped. Came closer. "You're hurt?"

There wasn't anything else to do but to explain the getting of the letters, skipping most of the details concerning Geigen. When I had finished she went to my coat and handed me the letters. The small envelope addressed to Taubek and the long blue envelope with the French stamps to M. S. N. La Roc's remained to be opened.

I opened Taubek's letter first. It was written in the elaborate flowing hand of a woman. I read the first sentence. I jumped to the signature and folded the letter. Taubek had given Elaine the address of Mischa's residence to write to. From the first sentence it was obvious that this was not the first letter Elaine had written him. I tore the letter up. I opened the other one.

"Mischa—look!" I held up a thick packet of long notes. They were French government gold bonds, payable to bearer.

Twenty of them we counted, our fingers fumbling over each other's in our excitement, and I was sitting up in bed and the covers could have been in Jerusalem for all I knew. Twenty French bonds! Each for 250,000 francs!

"It's the stolen money!" Mischa whispered.

Money Counted.

"Give me the pencil on the table." She figured the amount for me. "Roughly $260,000 in your terrible American currency!" All except $40,000 of the missing money.

She telephoned the Polizeamt at once. Kresch was out. He would return some time today or Tuesday.

She put down the receiver. We looked at each other and at the little flat pile of notes on the bedspread. "We're not going to trust any of the others at the Polizeiamt," I told her. "Carlson should be in at any moment."

I stopped. Suppose he didn't show you? Suppose Geigen had found him? "I'm going to get up, Mischa. We must reach Carlson. He'll know what to do with the money. We must find him before Geigen does."

"If Geigen was after the notes," she said thoughtfully, "do you think he'll bother with Carlson now? Hadn't you better risk telling the Polizeiamt even if Kresch isn't there? It's not only Geigen——"

"Mischa," I said, "we've got to get you out of here at once. We can leave a note for Carlson. If he doesn't come today then I'll have to stay and try to find him. But you can't stay here——"

The phone commenced to ring. Mischa reached for it without thinking, said "Hello," and I said, "Don't answer it!" but it was too late.

"Just a second——" She looked startled as she held out the phone.

Carlson on Phone.

"Shut your eyes," I said to her. After all, I was the one being looked at. My joints creaked when I struggled out of bed. I pulled a blanket over my shoulders, around my legs and sat down by the telephone. "Hello!" I said, embarrassed.

"It's you, Bill?" I can't describe the wave of relief that swept over me as Carlson's English came over the wires.

"Listen. I just got in. Tire blew out. Delayed me. Here's the plan. You—now, damn it! Bill, don't interrupt. You meet me in front of your pension—what time is it now? Nine-thirty? Meet me in front in an hour and a half. At 11. Put everything in your pockets that you want to take. You can't pack. I've"——

"Wait a minute, Carlson. This is"——

"Don't interrupt. I'm on my way to see the lawyers. They're waiting now at the plant. I'm going with you and it'll take at least 40 minutes to give all operation details of the plant to the lawyers and at least another 20 to get out there and back. There's nothing for me to do over there now with Geigen fixed so he can't buy. We can't take much. Tagen—what is his name?—Tagenbruck's friend will pick me up in front of your place. I'll drive in from Schwetzingen in a company car. Get this because I've got to talk fast—we're going to drive down to Baden-Baden and back in one day on business. That's what you tell your landlady. Tagenbruck has it all arranged to slide us across into France when we arrive. We—what?"

Story Told Again.

"Geigen's escaped, I've been trying to tell you. Geigen and Elaine. Kresch has been trying to get you. He wants to warn you. I'll come over at once. You're in danger"——

"Nonsense. Listen. I"——

"Nonsense, hell! If you could see what Geigen did to me last night! But I got the letters! The money's in French bonds. It amounts roughly to $260,000 in our money"——

"The money! What money? Will you talk so I can understand?"

I skipped, hopped and jumped over the events of last night . . .

"And Kresch isn't here," I finished. "What'll I do with the bonds? Anyone can cash them who has them and Geigen knows I've the letter containing them. That's what he was after."

"I can't pick up the bonds now, Bill. It's impossible. Listen, you keep the bonds. I'll tell the lawyers. They can drive down with me and pick them up. Let them have the bonds. It's the company's money. If the Heidelberg police ever get it, God knows how soon we'll see it. Now . . . have you all the details? I'm talking from the hotel. I go out to Schwertzingen. Meet you by 11 or a little after. We give the money to the company's lawyers. But we don't need to tell them we aren't coming back from Baden-Baden, so don't make any breaks. Understand, old-timer? You've done a grand job, and when I see you I want to know all about it."

He started to hang up. "Wait a minute, Carlson!" But he had hung up.

Then the telephone rang for the second time.

Mischa jumped out of her seat. "I'll take it," I told her. "It's Carlson." I picked up the phone and sat down. A German voice replied.

"Herr Tat-zohn? This is Fedl speaking for Herr Polizeidirektor Kresch. We are in Speyer. We have located Herr Geigen and Fraulein Edrich. Herr Polizeidirektor Kresch has asked me to request you to come to Speyer at once."

Write Your Prize-Winning Solution of the Sparrow Murders Today—Mail Before Midnight Tuesday

Who killed these four characters in the Talking Sparrow Murders: Kohlman, the elder? Spalger? Taubek? The newsboy? How were the murders committed and what was the motive behind them?

These are the points to be covered in your solution of the mystery, for which 34 prizes, totaling $300, are offered by The Washington Post. Your solution must be written in the form of a confession of the criminal, or the arch-criminal if you believe more than one person in involved. The confession must not contain more than 500 WORDS and must be postmarked before MIDNIGHT TUESDAY, JUNE 5, or left at the office of The Washington Post before that time if it is delivered by messenger or in person.

To make the contest simple, and fair for everyone, your letter may be written in pencil, ink or on the typewriter, on one or both sides of the paper. Decoration of the manuscript or literary quality will carry no weight with the judges. Accuracy, as compared with the author's solution in the concluding chapter in The Post, will be the determining factor in awarding the prizes. Neatness also will count. Anyone is eligible to compete except employes of The Post and their families.

First and second prizes will be $100 and $50 in cash, respectively. Third prize will be a series of 12 books from The Crime Club, Inc., a publishing house famous for its wide variety of detective and mystery stories. One book a month will be delivered to the winner for a year, exactly as if it were a Crime Club subscription ordered through our local book store. There will be six prizes of $10 each, and five of $5 each. The last 20 prizes each will be a copy of H. C. Bailey's first full-length novel about Mr. Reginald Fortune, one of the most popular of all fiction detectives, also a Crime Club publication.

Judges will be the fiction editor of The Post and a competent committee, and their decisions will be announced as soon after the close of the contest as the "confessions" can be read. Questions about the contest should be addressed to the Fiction Editor of The Washington Post.

To give contestants an opportunity to submit their solutions, no installment of the Talking Sparrow Murders will be published Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. You can pick up the story again in Thursday's Washington Post.

The Nut Work Network

By H. I. PHILLIPS.

Announcer—Under the auspices of the Iron Bridge Corporation of North America, makers of nice bridges for nice people—"The bridge you will ultimately buy"—I now present again Mr. T. Quincy Cribbett, newshawk of the air waves, in another one of his breath-taking reports on world events. Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Gribbett in person.

Mr. Cribbett—Hello, everybody, and friends. This has been an eventful day on this little globe of ours. There's been lots doing everywhere. First comes the big news in the country's weekly bandit hunt. "Nine-gun" Bohunkus, desperado who has been terrorizing the country, today staged another attack by land and sea on the army and navy, gaining twenty miles over a wide front and entrenching himself in what seems to be an impregnable position behind a battery of news-reel cameras.

At one time the National troops penetrated the bandit's lines and had a chance to take him prisoner, but were able to capture only a few dozen of his girl friends and a Pomeranian pup.

It was reported that the Government, unable to put any more divisions in the field, would sue for peace. "They'll have to sue if they want to get it from me," said Bohunkus to a staff of war correspondents.

Here's an interesting item from Washington. General Johnson today abandoned the code for flagpole sitters under which flagpole sitters have been compelled to operate during the last year. Flagpole sitters will no longer be required to ascend poles two at a time in order to spread the work.

"I now look for a big upward movement in our industry," said Flagpole Monahan today. "However, if the Government really wants to solve the crisis by spreading the work, it will build more flagpoles. There should be a flagpole for every sitter."

• • • •

Let me read you a few more hot news items, folks, and don't yawn while I'm talking.

Paris, France—The Chamber of Deputies resigned today in a body, giving no reason other than that something must be all wrong inasmuch as there had been no riots in the streets of Paris for almost 48 hours. "The lack of riots shows that the administration has been a failure," said one deputy.

• • • •

Washington, D. C.—The erection of a great chain of padded cells, stretching from coast to coast, was urged on the floor of the House today by Congressman Esterhazy Bunch. They are needed, he said, to house the thousands of Americans who are getting nuttier and nuttier reading the contradictory statements issued by capital and labor on the recovery and trying to make up their minds whether the New Deal has saved business or whether business has saved the New Deal. No opposition was voiced and the chain will probably be erected.

• • • •

New York City—Rumors that Max Baer had worn a hole in his dancing pumps and would be unable to appear in his scheduled battle with Carnera, brought forth a report that Hollywood had been urged to recommend some other good movie actor to meet Carnera for the heavyweight crown.

Will Rogers has been offered the chance, but has turned it down on the ground that participation in a heavyweight fight these days prevents a man from taking any real exercise or keeping himself fit. ZaSu Pitts is being talked of as a possible opponent.

• • • •

Tokyo, Japan—The Japanese war office today received official notice from America that Japan would have to postpone any war with this country at this time, as America is too busy fighting pants pressers who are chiseling under the Blue Eagle. Feeling is running high throughout the Orient.

• • • •

New York City—Street corner vendors today appealed to the Government for Federal control. They want Uncle Sam to plow under every fifth box of lead pencils for three years, so that the supply will not exceed the demand. "It would be swell," said a peddler today, "if the Government would burn the surplus shoestrings, too."

• • • •

Baltimore, Md.—Doctors at Johns Hopkins today announced that an ideal diet for reducing consisted of pink flamingo eggs and camel's milk. "But it is impossible to get pink flamingo eggs and camel's milk in this country," said a reporter.

"That's why it's such a great reducing diet," said one of the doctors.

• • • •

New York City—John F. Curry denied tonight that he would resign as boss of Tammany Hall or that he would be ousted. "But you are no longer boss of Tammany Hall. You were fired a month ago," it was explained to him.

"That's right," replied Mr. Curry. "My memory isn't what it used to be."

• • • •

Chicago, Ill.—Chidsey Z. Pipp, an official of the U. S. Department of Justice, was kidnaped in the center of the city today while making a speech warning all kidnapers that kidnaping must stop. He was quite surprised. When the Government was notified it issued a statement warning kidnapers that kidnaping must stop, but didn't say when.

• • • •

Berlin—The bravest man in all Europe was discovered here today. He came home to find himself the father of a baby boy and had it christened Abie.

• • • •

Announcer—That will do, Mr. Cribbett.

Mr. Cribbett—But I have more news. . . .

Announcer—Not for this program. Ladies and gentlemen, I now switch you to the grand bullroom—beg pardon—ballroom of the Gazazza Hotel where the annual banquet of the American League for Tariff Improvement is now in session. Mr. Abercrombie P. Smathersby, famous tariff expert, is delivering his address on the topic, "Ten Thousand Suggestions for Better Tariffs." Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Smathersby:

• • • •

Mr. Smathersby—And so, gentlemen, I come to my next point. . . .

Voices—Let's have a good song.

Other voices—What's he talking about, anyhow?

Mr. Smathersby—Let us take the matter of tenpenny nails. In 1917, American exports of tenpenny nails reached the high total of . . .

Voice—Did you hear the one about the traveling salesman and the dairyman's aunt?

Another voice—I tell you the Yanks are a cinch to cop the pennant this year.

Mr. Smathersby—What does this mean, insofar as our relations with Norway and Sweden are concerned?

Voice—I like Ed Wynn better than Cantor. Joe Cook is funny, too.

Voice—Hey! Orchestra leader! Play "Smoke Gets in My Ears."

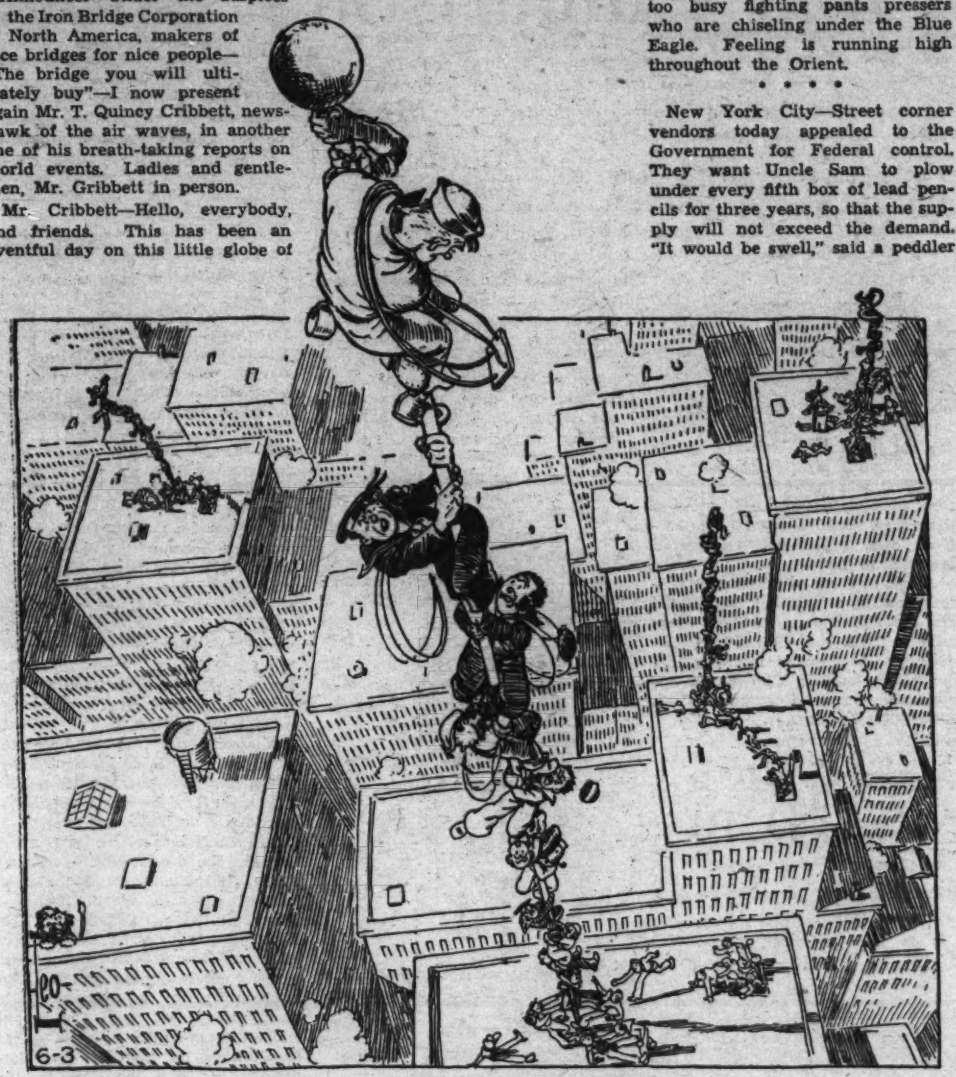
Mr. Smathersby—And now, let me go back to the point I was emphasizing an hour ago. . . .

Voices—NO!

• • • •

Announcer—I am sure you enjoyed this clear explanation of the tariff situation, folks. Mr. Smathersby is enjoying it very much, in fact, he is having so much fun I don't know how they will ever stop him. That is all for today. Don't forget to tune in next week and get the winners in the America Pie Crust Hour's contest through which 100 electric nutcrackers are being given to people who really want ice picks.

(Copyright, 1934, Associated Newspapers.)



"I now look for a big upward movement in our industry," said Flagpole Monahan today. "However, if the Government really wants to solve the crisis by spreading the work, it will build more flagpoles. There should be a flagpole for every sitter."

Prohibition's Frankenstein Monster Is Still With Us

Amendment looked as immovable as Queen Mary's umbrella.

A more nervy entrepreneur of this general school goes through all the same motions, except that he uses bottles with real labels. These are bought from dealers, who bought them from janitors, who picked them up in waste baskets and garbage cans and other burial places of "dead soldiers." The man who practices the "refill racket" by selling fake whisky in bona fide containers will get punished more severely—if he's caught.

A complicated business of jumping back and forth across State lines provides employment for others. The operator in this case buys liquor in a State with a low tax, or perhaps no tax at all, and sells it across the border where the State tax is high. On the other hand, he may obtain tax exemption in his home State on the ground that his liquor is being intended for shipment to another Commonwealth and then fail to declare it when it gets there.

More sinister are the operators of hotels and restaurants who let not the right hand know what the left is doing. The right hand buys a few bottles of genuine, tax-paid imported liquor. The left hand buys from a smuggler in larger quantity. When the honest goods are gone the dishonest are brought out, and if an inspector comes around, the restaurant keeper pulls out his old legitimate bills to "prove" that he is selling "honest-to-God, tax-paid stuff."

This type of citizen is sometimes so antisocial as to make his own potables and pour them into bottles which once contained the most ambrosial "product of Scotland."

Towering over all such pettifogging miscreants stands the gangster of the Terrible Twenties. He has not retired to a nunnery since the sale of liquor became lawful, but remains as the operator of huge distilleries which threaten the legitimate manufacturer, flout the tax collector and corrupt the citizen all along the route.

In one of New York's great department stores recently, the discovery was made that a whole shipment of "imported" whisky bought from a supposedly bona fide jobber, was bottleg stuff. All through the trade, fraud crops up, from the small neighborhood retailer to the club steward, who gets an elaborate appropriation to buy the "McCoy" and slips in a few cases of illicit goods instead, with the difference going into his own pocket.

The business of faking bottles and labels, built up through 14 years of the dry decade, is still flourishing. When Federal agents raided a printing establishment in St. Louis, they confiscated four tons of fake labels, wrappers, &c.

Against the legions of gangdom stand the 1,400 investigators of the alcohol tax unit of the Internal Revenue Bureau. Even in the days of prohibition, when the Department of Justice was making its woefully inadequate attempt to enforce the law, there were 600 more agents than this in the field.

"The Federal enforcement agencies are not to be blamed," says Choate. "They have done wonders with the very limited means at their disposal, • • • There should be greatly increased appropriations for enforcement. • • • We must stop burying our heads in the sand and see to it that enforcement is brought about."

Mr. Choate has other suggestions for attacking the problem. He wants "immediate adoption of every reasonable means of cheapening and improving the legal product." He wants "such reduction in taxes and import duties as will enable the legal producers and importers to compete" and "relaxation of such forms of sales-control as make it harder for the buyer to get legal beverages than illegal goods." And he favors a campaign "started and maintained by every organization interested in temperance, including all honest drys and repealists, to arouse public opinion and compel the aid of every police and prosecuting authority, local and State as well, as Federal, to press for efficient and drastic action."

Public opinion, that old wheelhorse, is the indispensable element of any victory over the bootlegger. The bootlegger was a hero once, a kind of American Robin Hood hustling drinks to the thirsty. The depression did much to squash this sort of mushy-mindedness.

But today the average American is thinking that he can save sometimes 50 per cent on his liquor bill by buying it from an illicit source. And the average American, male and female, old and young, consumes far more of the "hard stuff" than he did before we undertook the noble experiment. This crude, ugly fact of an increased National thirst is one of the sharpest horns of the dilemma.

In other words, the cause of temperance has been set back by the experiment of prohibition for nearly a generation.

THE third annual contract tournament of the National Press Club was concluded Monday night with the men's pair contest for the cup presented by Col. M. H. McIntyre, secretary to President Roosevelt.

Twenty-two boards were played under the Howell movement. The winners were Frank J. Albus and Walter H. Kilbourne with a match point score of 65½ with one point added by reason of penalty imposed upon another pair for having played two boards out of turn. The runners-up were Col. Logan Golsan and Oliver Hoyam, with E. P. Sanford and Newton Montgomery, third.

Because women were excluded from playing for the McIntyre Trophy, Chairman John O. Williams, of the games committee, arranged a special duplicate for them. The winners were Mrs. T. W. Brahany and Mrs. John D. Mothershed, north and south, and Mrs. Harry F. Helwig and Mrs. Holland Huntington, east and west. Flowers were awarded them as prizes.

Chairman Williams awarded trophies, as well as the club's season prizes for the highest scores made since the semimonthly games began last December. These went to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Brayman, first, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Helwig, second.

The final monthly duplicate of the 1933-34 season of the Washington Bridge League will be held Wednesday night at the Shoreham. It will be the last opportunity for those who have played in three previous games only to qualify for the big game Thursday, June 21, and Wednesday, June 27. Owing to the large number of players who have qualified, it has been decided to conduct it in two sessions and in three sections, with players divided according to the average of scores made in the monthly games. An opportunity will be afforded those who have failed to qualify for the finals to play in an open game at each session.

The league will hold summer duplicate games at the Shoreham twice each month, on the first and third Wednesdays. The dates are July 18, August 1 and 15 and September 5 and 19. The fall and winter season will open in October.

In the city's interclub finals one of the National Press Club teams was the winner. It comprised C. E. Stewart and John D. Mothershed, and Harold Brayman and Pelps Adams. In the preliminaries 15 teams were entered, representing the Chevy Chase Club, the Columbia Golf Club, the Army and Navy Club, the Washington Golf and Country Club, the Racquet Club, the Capital City Chess Club and the National Press Club. Two teams from the National Press Club and one each from the Chess Club and the Washington Golf and Country Club qualified for the finals.

The finals in the United States Bridge Association pair championship for the District of Columbia will be held at the Hotel Roosevelt on June 7, 8 and 9. Those who have thus far qualified in the preliminaries held under the auspices of the Washington Bridge Club are Mr. and Mrs. James H. Lemon, Mrs. Martin West and Mrs. Eugene Nolan, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Hill, Mrs. Rose Robbins and Mrs. Fannie Samuel, George Bishop and S. F. Gerbert, Herbert Shepard and Dr. E. B. Conolly, Messrs. Brown and McAuliffe, H. M. Pierson and Isaac H. York, Messrs. Cochran and Hussey, Col. A. S. Perkins and Maj. E. B. Gray, James Sourelas and W. R. Lewis. Leaders in the preliminaries are Mrs. Robbins and Mrs. Samuel, who made the rather remarkable score of 100 match points out of a possible 136.

Winners in the finals will participate in the regional contest, meeting similar winners from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, West Virginia and Delaware. Regional winners will participate in the National pair championship to be held this fall under the direction of the United States Bridge Association.

Winning pairs in the local preliminaries are also qualified to take part in the team matches for the team championship of the District. The team winners will also take part in the regional and National championship matches.

Hist! Repeat it in whispers! John D. Mothershed, local ace, was actually caught in a revoke! Regretfully, but frankly, he admits the faux pas, his first in a very long time. The penalty which Mr. Mothershed and his partner, C. E. Stewart, paid for his mistake was rather more expensive than ordinarily such an error would be. They were playing in the men's match for the McIntyre Cup at the National Press Club. They were in a favorable contract that would have given them top score on the board then being played. The revoke gave them bottom instead, and the loss of a sufficient number of points which, if added to the score made on the other boards, would have enabled them to win the trophy.

Mr. Mothershed's only alibi, which is more or less a legitimate one, is that his partner did not call attention to his failure to follow suit as he should have done.

A record penalty double, so far as Washington bridge clubs are concerned, occurred a few days ago in a duplicate game at the Washington Whist Club. The cards had been properly shuffled, cut and dealt and on one board north held hearts, A-K-Q-J-10-9; spades, A-K-Q; clubs, A-K-Q-J; diamonds, none. At one table a north player gasped when she picked up the hand and upon recovering from her surprise bid seven hearts. West doubled and was as promptly redoubled. It certainly looked like a killing for the north and south players. The murder, however, was committed by the east and west players. West held all the remaining hearts—seven to the eight spot—and six diamonds to the ace, with only the king missing, no spades and no clubs. West led the ace of diamonds and dummy showed down with six spades to the jack, three small diamonds and four small clubs. Declarer was obliged to trump with the nine of hearts and then led her remaining six hearts, which were all the tricks taken by the hand, west winning all the others with his remaining two trumps and five good diamonds. Result, down 7,000, doubled and redoubled, vulnerable, less 150 for honors.

At all the other tables the contract rested at six hearts doubled and redoubled, and the loss was held to 3,350.

Under the law of mathematical probability such a deal would occur only once in a little less than 15,000,000,000 times.

Masaryk Owes Fame to Wife

Masaryk lived in constant fear of prison—or death.

It is now apparent that Mrs. Masaryk was constantly communicating witn him on conditions in Austria. Coded messages came to him in innocently worded "Help Wanted" or "For Rent" advertisements in Prague newspapers. There were many other ways; once, a man brought him a message in a hollow tooth, 200 words closely written on a piece of extremely thin silk.

Soon, as the result of Masaryk's efforts, there were 30,000 Czechs in the Russian army, fighting against Austria. When Russia quit the war, Masaryk transferred his Czech legion 5,000 miles across the Siberian Railway to Vladivostok, where it embarked for France.

Success came to Masaryk as the Czecho-Slovakian National Council he organized in Paris was recognized by the Allies, and Czech independence was officially made part of the Allied objective in the war.

Proclaimed Freedom.

On October 14, 1918, Masaryk, then in Washington for a conference with President Wilson, issued in this city a declaraton of independence for Czech-Slovakia. Two weeks later, as the ancient Hapsburg empire crumbled into ruin, a Czech national committee staged an almost bloodless revolution in Prague and took over the government. And to the country he had freed, Masaryk returned to become its first President.

To his wife, whose health had been shattered while she remained in Austria to labor for the cause of Czech freedom, Masayrk paid a heartfelt tribute for her part in his success.

"You can not know how I have missed her these past four years," he said. "Many times, deprived of her insight into affairs and her foresight into the future, I have been completely incapacitated. Yet I know that we have been working together—our minds are so in tune that I believe we almost think the same thoughts."

On November 14, 1918, the National Assembly of the new republic of Czecho-Slovakia chose Masaryk as President by acclamation. He was elected for seven-year terms in 1920, 1927 and again in 1934. A provision in the constitution says that he is the only President who can ever hold the office for more than one term.

But his wife, who had shared so many of his trials and triumphs, was unable to attend his triumphal return to Prague and his first inauguration in 1918. Weakened by hardship and persecution during the four years of the war, she was ill in a sanitarium, where she died five years later.

Tall, vigorous and erect despite his 84 years, Czecho-Slovakia's President now resides in the great castle of Hradschin, home of ancient Bohemian kings. He spends much of his time in his great library, still pursuing his lifetime study of philosophy.

Serfs of Hapsburgs.

He rules an ancient land where, for centuries, his people had been serfs under the iron heel of the Hapsburgs, his own father having been a coachman in an imperial estate and his mother having been a housemaid.

As a boy, he lived with his parents in servants' quarters and outbuildings, always in direst poverty. His mother, who had admired the manners of educated youths, determined that her son should have an education. He was sent first to the little village school near his native Chaykovitz and later to a school at Hustopetz, where he earned his tuition by being the school janitor and helping the village priest with funerals. As the result of a childish prank, in which he participated with several other boys, he was given 25 lashes by his school teacher and expelled.

With a bag containing an extra shirt and a half a loaf of bread, young Masaryk went to Vienna to learn the locksmith trade. He lived in a mean basement room and often went hungry, spending his money for books rather than for food.

Tiring of this, he trudged back home, catching occasional rides, and became a blacksmith's helper. In this job he often toiled from 4 a. m. until long after dark.

Worked for His Board.

But the desire for an education still burned within him. Through the friendship of a teacher he entered another school and worked for his board. Then he went to a "gymnasium," or high school, through the agency of a friendly village priest and boarded with a cobbler while he continued to work for his scanty living. Only when he went home at holidays did he have enough to eat.

Gradually, he began to earn a little money as a tutor, meantime continuing his studies. In 1872, he entered the University of Vienna and turned to the study of philosophy. Friendship with a banker resulted in the latter financing him at the University of Leipzig.

A philosopher as well as a statesman, President Masaryk has won almost equal fame in both fields. His philosophical essays are universally recognized.

Defensive Play in Evenly Balanced Hands.

By ELY CULBERTSON.

FEW stories are written about hands played at part-score contracts because the human mind seems to be so constructed as to desire the drama of the struggle for game or rubber rather than the quieter battle when the bidding has stopped short of these major goals. As a matter of fact, the battle between attack and defense in part-score hands is usually much more thrilling and many more fine plays are made. The reason for this is that the opposing forces are more evenly balanced and thus the struggle is in fact a struggle between two nearly equal armies.

In a recent championship tournament the hand below, which is illustrative of fine defense, was played.

North, Dealer
East and West vulnerable

	♠ A 7 6 3 2 ♡ K Q 8 5 ◇ J 8 ♣ A 7
♠ 5 4 ♡ A ◇ 9 7 6 ♣ K J 10 6 5 4 3	N W E S	♠ K J 10 ♡ 10 9 4 3 2 ◇ A 5 4 ♣ 9 2
	♠ Q 9 8 ♡ J 7 6 ◇ K Q 10 3 2 ♣ Q 8

The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

North	East	South	West
1♠	Pass	2◇(1)	Pass(2)
2♡(3)	Pass	2♠(4)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—In view of the five-card length, two diamonds is the best response with this hand.

2—West's vulnerability impels him to decide against entering the bidding at the range of three in view of the fact that his partner has already passed.

3—Correctly showing the slightly shaded heart suit.

4—South indicates his preference between North's two bid suits.

East opened the top of his doubleton in clubs. The Queen was played from Dummy, West covered with the King, and North played the Ace. North, in order to assure against a bad break in trumps, now led a diamond in order tc establish that suit. His decision as to the play here was not bad, but resulted unfortunately. East won the second trick with the Ace of diamonds and led another club, which was won by West. West realized that his partner must have a trump trick, as otherwise North would have gone further in the bidding. Basing the play on this assumption, he now laid down the Ace of hearts and followed with a club. This in many instances would be considered bad play as it gave to North a ruff in one hand and a discard in the other. But West well knew that North could make no helpful discard. North played a heart, and East ruffed with the King. East returned a heart, which West ruffed, and West returned still another club, giving to East the opportunity for a brilliant false-card. He ruffed with the Knave and was over-ruffed with the Queen in Dummy, but the Declarer now expected to find the Ten in the West hand and led the nine from the Dummy and finessed, the blank Ten in the East hand winning.

The hand, of course, could be played to produce three spades, but North's error in play at any point was not really glaring, while the East and West defense was superlatively fine.

As Man Seeks Enormous Speeds in the Air, Experts Fix 500 Miles an Hour as Maximum of Present Type Planes true in regard to transport airplanes carrying from 8 to 15 or 20 passengers. A number of advanced models have been developed in this country that can carry a load of mail and express and passengers at a speed in excess of 200 miles an hour. Transcontinental runs are maintained regularly on schedules calling for flying at more than 3 miles a minute.

To make this possible the aeronautical engineers have been obliged to devise new aids to flying and to perfect new safety devices. The trend has been to a twin-engined airplane built of metal with but one wing and braced internally.

The further development of streamlining has aided materially in making these high speeds possible. And as the speed of the planes in the air has been increased, it follows that their landing speeds has had a tendency to increase proportionately.

To solve this problem of enabling the plane to fly at high speeds when in the air, and yet to enable the pilot to slow it down when making his approach for a landing, the "air brake" has been developed.

This brake is simply a well-designed flap that can be lowered from the wing into the air stream, thereby causing resistance and slowing up the plane as it approaches the ground and at the same time providing increased lift at the lower speed.

Another engineering feature which is contributing to increased speed is the geared propeller. This gives the airplane the same "gearing" advantages as the automobile. The pitch or the angle of the propeller in flight is controlled by the pilot. When the plane is climbing to the altitude at which it will fly its course the pilot widens the angle of the propeller so that it can take a more firm grasp on the air and pull the plane up with more power. When flying position is reached, the angle of the propeller is flattened so that it will attain a greater number of revolutions and will pull the plane through the air faster.

The automatic or "robot" pilot has been improved as an aid to transport fliers until it is now standard equipment on at least one of the Nation's best airplanes. The robot pilot, however, needs the human element to adjust it, and to put it into use when it can be of service. It is merely a device to handle the controls of the plane in the ar when the plane is on its course.

The latest type of giant transport airplanes.

No matter to what state of perfection these aids to flying may be developed, it seems probable that the aerodynamic principles involved, together with the physical limitations concerning human beings, will make it impossible for man to fly much more than 500 miles an hour, a speed which we nearly have attained now.

However, this writer would not want to go on record as saying that these principles are inflexible and that speeds in excess of 500 miles an hour will never be achieved.

Within 30 or 40 years an entirely new generation of scientists will take over our problems in this field. What they may be able to accomplish no one can tell. They even may be able to design a human body that can be thrown through the air in the cabin of a plane 1,000 miles an hour, make a 45-degree turn and ask for more.

Columbia Professor Says R. O. T. C. Builds Toward World Strife

orary colonel's uniform, after the manner of a musical comedy actress. These co-ed colonels are pleasant to the eye, but sickening when compared to the reality of war.

I suspect that this emasculated military training results from realization that a closer approach to reality, as for example in the bayonet drill now dropped from the course, would arouse National resentment against the whole movement. Faced with its task of keeping up the military reserves of the country as best it may, the War Department must feel it desirable to draw as many young men as it can from school and college into the commissioned Army reserve by means of a training which Army officers themselves sometimes admit is inadequate. Then, if war comes, there is at least a partial supply of good officer material on hand ready for real training to command a draft army in a bloody, as distinct from a parade ground, war.

In fact, the present system of military training is an outgrowth of War Department experience in suddenly producing a first-class fighting force out of raw material in time of emergency. It is based upon two acts of Congress, the Morrill Land Grant Act of 1862 and the National Defense Act of 1916, amended in 1920, which is in effect the present constitution of our Army. One was passed during the Civil War, the other in the heated atmosphere of the World War. And both, I take it, are aimed, in their military training sections at least, at meeting the need for officers when a preoccupied United States suddenly finds that it has involved itself in a war.

What is the result? In 1932-33, the last year for which figures are available, there were 147,999 students in 399 schools and colleges taking military training or rifle practice, at an annual cost of about $10,000,000. From this annual expenditure the War Department gains, to take the 1930-31 figures as an example, 5,870 commissioned reserve officers.

In 159 schools and colleges of the 231 accepting Federal money for an R. O. T. C. unit in 1931, the military training is compulsory for part of the student's career at least. Neither under the Morrill Act nor under the National Defense Act is compulsion required. Many opponents of military training are particularly disturbed by this compulsion. But to my mind, bad as it is, compulsory training is less evil than the fact that the military courses exist at all. Military science and tactics, even on an elective basis, have no right in a curriculum devoted to the liberal arts, the professions, or commercial and industrial skills. Military training is a splinter in the thumb of education.

All of which brings us back to the place we began, namely, that military training is only a detail in a far larger picture. After all, there are less than 300 secondary schools of the 27,000 in this country, and only 160 colleges and professional schools of the 1,400 existing, which offer some form of Federally supported military training. What is important, however, is what our military training stands for in the larger picture. And that picture is the vastly troubled world upon which we look today.

In past centuries, no doubt, National defense meant military defense. But who can now, after the last war, doubt that the best defense of the United States, the best preparedness, is to make sure that it shall not happen again?

To do so is not simple. For this country it means a reexamination of all those policies which we consider to be exclusively our own business, but which together build up our international position. War debts, foreign trade and finance, tariffs, neutrality rights, immigration, relations with the League and World Court—these and many others must be studied not only for themselves alone, but also in reference to whether or not, when put together, they lead us toward war. For let us repeat it, nations today do not make war, but make conditions, often unwittingly, which make war inevitable.

And so I say, abolish military training in civic schools and colleges, and abolish the thirty days of playing at war which is the C. M. T. C. But if you abolish it, do so not because of the pacifists among us have outshouted the militarists. Do so because the United States has looked upon the larger scene of world affairs, and has consciously thought its way through to the road of peace which it so sincerely professes. And if you do not abolish civilian military training for those reasons, then prepare in earnest for the slaughter and corruption of men and wealth which will come with the Second World War.

Capital Turf Fans Alert At the Prospect of Racing

interstate race, as it was called, in 1806. Five horses were entered: Floretta and Oscar, representing Maryland; First Consul, representing Pennsylvania; Topgallant, representing Virginia, and Nancy, representing New Jersey. The race was run in three four-mile heats, each under eight minutes. Floretta, closely pressed by Oscar and First Consul, won.

Racing was not abandoned here even when the country went to war with Great Britain. In 1812, a month or two after war had been declared, the usual fall meeting, "never a finer show of horses," was held. A year later Washingtonians, still a little panicky from the arrival of the British fleet on the Potomac, banished their fears at the track.

After the war turf activities declined. They were revived soon, however. By 1822, the "second epoch" was auspiciously launched. This was to be highly successful and even more noted than the first. The course, which began as a field of rivalry between Maryland and Virginia, now became an arena of competition between the North and the South.

In this second epoch, the sport had the approval of the White House.

Andrew Jackson was an out-and-out race fan. It is doubtful which "Old Hickory" liked most, a political fight or a horse-race. He was a horseman long before he was President, and he had a genuine taste for sport.

During his Administration, horses wearing the colors of the President were among the entries. This has never happened before or since. Jackson thought best to disguise this by having the horses entered in the name of his private secretary, Maj. Donelson.

In 1836 Jackson entered a favorite filly from Hermitage in a great sweepstakes. Confident of winning, he wagered recklessly. The filly was a favorite in the betting. She led for a time in each of the three heats, but could not hold the pace, and Commodore Stockton's Langford won. In another race the horse of a justice of the United States Supreme Court was among the also-rans.

While Van Buren was in the White House, during the brief time of Harrison and well into the days of President Tyler, racing flourished here. But enthusiasm waned and the "sport of kings" lost the support of officialdom and fashion. Then, about 1846, the end came. The famous "romantic days" of horse-racing in Washington were over.

Critics Hit At Ritchie

ber in which George Washington tendered his resignation as head of the Nation's armies to the Continental Congress. Three times in ten years Ritchie has been a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, the last occasion being in 1932.

An unusual feature of the campaign is that Gov. Ritchie and Mayor Jackson have been close personal and political friends for many years. They have fought party battles shoulder to shoulder and supported each other in their former campaigns.

The battle is also one between two men who have attained success by widely different paths in life and whose careers stand out in striking contrast.

Ritchie comes from a long line of wealth and aristocracy; Jackson comes from the self-made school that knows plenty of hard knocks.

In 1898, Ritchie began the practice of law in Baltimore; in the same year, Jackson moved to Baltimore, got a job with an optical concern and turned to politics as he enrolled in the old Seventh Ward Democratic Club.

In 1919 Ritchie was elected Governor of Maryland and was re-elected in 1923, 1926 and 1930.

In 1923 Jackson, who had become successful in the insurance business, was elected Mayor for a four-year term. He did not run again in 1927, but in 1931 he was elected for his present four-year term, defeating his Republican opponent by the largest majority ever given a mayoralty candidate in Baltimore.

In their race for the governorship Jackson and Ritchie are standing largely on their respective records as Mayor and Governor. And the records of both have been outstanding as their success at the polls attests.

During his first term Mayor Jackson called upon a committee of Baltimore's leading business men to help him and reorganized the city government from top to bottom. Antiquated methods were thrown out and a complete new deal begun.

As mayor, Mr. Jackson heads the government of a city of nearly a million people and directs the expenditure of a budget of more than $42,000,000 a year, in addition to being president of his own successful insurance business. He never forgets his humble origin, however. Over his desk at city hall hangs a picture of his birthplace, a ramshackle four-room frame house with a rickety and broken-down porch.

Gov. Ritchie is standing on his record. Every Marylander remembers how, in a drive for economy and efficiency, Ritchie completely reorganized the State government from top to bottom, replacing 55 State administrative boards with 19 smoothly-working departments. As a result, Maryland's State government has been called a model in many respects.

In addition to Jackson, Ritchie is being opposed for the Democratic nomination by Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick county. Candidates for the Republican nomination are Harry W. Nice, whom Ritchie defeated by 165 votes in 1919; H. Webster Smith, a Baltimore lawyer, and Harry Phoebus, an attorney of Somerset county.

The governor's four victories would have given him 16 years in office except for the fact, one of his terms was shortened to three years by a change in the State's election laws in order to make State and National elections coincide.

Personally, Governor Ritchie is a man of simple tastes with no hobbies and few diversions. He does not play golf or bridge, rarely attends the theater. Unmarried, he lives alone in the huge old executive mansion where his mother served as his hostess until her death a few years ago.

Month of June Brings Boys and Girls New Things About Which to Write, Draw

Stories Telling the Advantage of Our Schools Are Interesting at This Time

Dear Post Boys and Girls: Now that the month of roses and the month of graduations and the month that vacations begin has really come, our members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the artists of The Junior Post will find many new things to write about, and many new things to draw.

Many of The Junior Post writers and artists are going into high school from the grade schools next fall. This would be a very good time to write about the advantages of our Washington schools and something about the courses you think fit the boy or girl best for life. The editors of The Junior Post take great pride in the boys and girls who began to write and draw for The Junior Post when they were mere tots in the lower grades and have continued Junior Post contributors.

Some of The Junior Post contributors who have graduated from high school or college are now earning their living writing or drawing. Several of The Junior Post artists are now taking art courses in the leading art schools of the city. One boy who has drawn for The Junior Post since he was in the third grade is now gaining recognition as an artist in the leading art circles of our National Capital.

So you see you all have a chance. Be very careful to draw your very best or write your very best. Study your drawings and writings after they are printed in The Junior Post. That is a good way to improve your style and your work.

Many of the stories sent in by boys and girls show that they have really studied the subject about which they write. Of course, it is rather distressing to the editor to find that so many words are misspelled that it is not possible to print the story. Get the dictionary habit. If you are not sure how a word is spelled look it up in the dictionary.

The Junior Post does not print stories of haunted houses or stories that are not suitable for boys and girls of all ages to read. Older boys and girls can help a lot in keeping The Junior Post wholesome and entertaining.

News stories help to make The Junior Post more interesting, so send in as many as you can.

The Little Scamp.

Scamp always was full of tricks, but his favorite was this: After greeting friends very joyfully, he flops on his back, exposing his stomach for scratching. If you refuse to, he is most likely to pull himself along the floor with his front feet to your feet and touch or rub them with his paw, all of which means, "Rub stomach with this foot please."

Lately he has started the idea of escaping out of sight when his escort on the evening walk is not looking. He stays longer than he supposes and consequently is locked out for the night. Mother used to let him out a little in the morning and then open the door for his entrance a few minutes later to give him the command of waking the family upstairs. He always waits for this permission though because of what happened a while back when he disobeyed orders not to.

He often goes on errands with me and on the way home if I seem to loiter along the way he disappears. But when I walk down the alley I see him standing on the porch. The minute he sights me he turns around a few times and then runs to meet yours truly as if the parting had been a few hours instead of business.

About a year ago I taught him to sit on my knees, balancing on his hind legs. He never really cared to do this, but he can stay for at least a minute. One thing he does love, however. When Daddy brings home hamburger or neighbors bring food probably for him, he runs and hops on his hind feet, hoping to reach it eventually.

Spring Grasses.

I like to watch the grasses nod
Gently in the brown sod,
Swaying gently in the morning's air
They look so cute growning there.

Pretty little grasses gay,
They nod and dance all day,
Dancing in their gowns of green,
Prettiest sight I've ever seen.

Our Banner.

The lovely banner waving high
Casts its gleam against the sky;
The colors bright and shine bold
Makes me think of the days of old.

Their colors—red, white and blue—
Brought us liberty that is true;
And now they stand for the NRA,
Help us to live every single day.

There's a bugle blast—will the colors last?
"Forever, forever," the people shout,
"We will never, never let our banners' light go out!"

Our lovely banner, waving high,
Again casts its gleam against the sky;
The people are happy all through the day
Because that dear old banner made us that way.

Memorial Day.

It was a glorious May morning. A slight cool breeze was blowing from the West, while overhead the sun sent its warm rays down upon the earth.

It seemed as if nature herself had chosen to help to celebrate Memorial Day and to tell us that the boys who fought to defend America, our beloved country, were only asleep in peace. But as spring came, they, too, would awaken in spirit.

The grave of the "Unknown Soldier" was never more beautiful than on that Memorial Day.

As the flag was raised a sudden whirl of wind, sent the "Stars and Stripes," fluttering in the air. It looked down and seemed to smile and say.

"Oh, Unknown Soldier! You gave your life bravely to save your flag and your country. But never fear. We caught your flaming torch and I shall forever wave, O'er the land of the free, the home of the brave."

I felt a thrill of pride as I gazed at "Old Glory."

As the band played the "Star-Spangled Banner," the multitude leaped to their feet, a sight that I can never forget, a thrill such as I had never before known shot through me.

Proud to be called an American and proudly joining in with the multitude we came to the thrilling and stirring words, "Oh, say, does that Star-Spangled Banner yet wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?" "Old Glory" fluttered at the splendid salute of American voices and answered softly, "In God we must trust."

The Portrait of Martha Washington.

(Awarded $1.)

For many years there has hung in the White House a painting of Martha Washington, which is a splendid likeness of our first President's wife, and so beautifully done that it looks as though she were going to step out of the frame and graciously greet all who stop to admire her.

I am very, very proud of this portrait because my grandmother, who was then a young woman, was the model for this peice of work, and the noted artist, E. Andrews, was honored by having it hung in the home of our Presidents.

Although my grandmother has been dead for several years, I feel that she still lives as she stands in the beautiful brocaded gown of Martha Washington's day in the famous painting she loved so much.

A Loaf of Bread.

Did you ever realize how many people help in the making of one loaf of bread?

First the farmer buys seeds for a crop of wheat. He tends it through the summer. Then it goes to a mill, where many men transform it into flour. The flour is refined by still another group of workers. Then it is sold to a bakery.

The cook mixes the many other ingredients with it, bakes it and sends to on to more workers, who wrap it, &c. Then the delivery man carries it to your grocer and you buy it. There are many other ingredients used in bread, and back of them are hundreds of workers to make and refine it.

It lends to many a gloom.
People forget their joy and mirth,
And think of only doom.
But that is not the way to be,
When sunny days have long been o'er.
Why complaineth we?

Musical is the rain,
The music of a violin,
Growing louder, then soft again.
It speaks of joy, not sorrow or sin.
What would we do without the rain?
'Tis needed as much as the sunbeams.

It makes plants grow in field and plain,
As same as the sun makes the gleam.
But to reap your reward,
The ground must be prepared,
It must not be hard,
No toil must be spared.

So it is with our lives,
The rain, God's blessing, falls on everyone.
But the hard unprepared ground, where none strive
To cultivate for the rays of the sun,
Is not benefited by the shower.
The water will not sink into the ground.
But with God's power,
No good seed will be found
To grow in that hard ground.

In other lands, it is prepared
With seed when the rain doth come.
Well has the gardener cared
For the bounteous harvested sum,
So let us prepare our souls
For the shower, with the seed,
Which once sown, grows straight,
Rising to heaven for the need,
Undiscouraged by fate.

In the Editor's Letter Box

Dear Editor: I am sending in a story. My sister is sending a picture. My sister's age is 10 and mine is 12. My sister's name is Lillian Waldron and my name is Virginia Waldron. My address is Lovettsville, Va. My sister and I both sent in something at Easter.

Yours truly,
VIRGINIA WALDRON.

Dear Editor: I thank you very much for publishing my poem in The Junior Post. I am sending in a story, "The Witch in the Mountains," which I hope will be worthy of publishing. I am also sending in a joke and asking you to start a joke column in The Junior Post.

Yours truly,
MARJORIE MORELAND.
Berryville, Va.

Dear Editor: I have read The Junior Post for many weeks and enjoy it greatly. Enclosed find my two drawings, which I hope are worthy of publication. They are my first drawings to be sent in, although I have attempted many times before to write and send them in. Very truly,
MARY E. SCHMITT.
McLean, Va.

Dear Editor: I am sending in three, a letter to Laird Kiltie, a picture for the number for Memorial Day and another drawing. As soon as school is out I will be able to send in things more often, but now were are preparing for exams.

Your sincerely,
MARY JANE MORRISON.
116 Belmont avenue, Alexandria, Va.

Dear Editor: I wish to thank you for publishing my story on Gen. Robert Edward Lee, who is my ideal hero. The story I am inclosing is entitled "Memorial Day." I often wish I could write what I really feel in my heart toward my country and my flag, which I love most dearly. One of my friends, to whom I showed my story, commented: "But the flag does not talk."

I felt sorry for her, because I know that the flag spoke to me—and will speak to those who have open hearts and who will listen.

Sincerely,
MARIE LOUISE RALPH (age 12).
5210 Illinois avenue northwest.

Dear Editor: I wish to express my thanks for publishing the two poems I sent to you. I hardly expected to see them in the paper, but I am of course very glad they were good enough.

Not long ago I was asked to write a class poem for the school year book. I am inclosing the poem and hope it meets with as much success as the others. Sincerely,

Sincerely,
HELEN FURBEE (age 13).

Dear Editor: I thank you for publishing my Laird Kiltie letters and printing my Mother's Day drawing. I am sending a strip drawing and a letter to Laird Kiltie. Yours truly,
LYRA WILSON (age 14).
2514 Fourteenth street northwest.

Dear Editor: I am sending you a picture of a Boeing P W-9, though which I hope to earn membership to The Junior Post.

The drawing is copied from a picture, but it is not a tracing.

I am interested in aviation very much, and I have built and flown a few models. Sincerely yours,
THOMAS JOHNSON (age 14).
Yancey Mills, Va.

Dear Editor—My hopes are high that this drawing, the first of mine ever submitted to The Junior Post, will be accepted. I like very much to read Teh tJunior Post.

Hopefully yours,
FRANCES COLLINS.
2200 California street northwest.

Dear Editor—I have been submitting drawings, poems and stories to The Junior Post for about four years now and have received prizes quite a few times.

I am a little late in submitting something this time, but better late than never. I am submitting a story entitled "Mary to the Rescue." I hope it will be successful.

Sincerely yours,
ROSE WINTERFELDT (age 15).
801 E street southwest.

Dear Editor: I am sending in two letters for Pets' Corner, a poem and a story. It's been a long time since I sent anything to The Junior Post. I have been sick. That was a fine drawing by Ray Dean and by Lyra Wilson. I like G. G. Tores' drawings. He certainly can draw well.

Yours truly,
ALDA AUMACK.
Burnleys, Va.

Dear Editor: For some time I have been reading The Junior Post and I want to tell you how much I think of it.

The Junior Post gives boys and girls a chance to write what they like in the way of poetry or stories.

I am sending in a letter to Laird Kiltie, which I hope shall be worthy of publication.

Sincerely yours,
BESSIE F. KEYS (age 15).
Clifton Station, Va.

Dear Editor: I am sending this story in to The Junior Post on an impulse. It is original and I doubt if I should have written it because it is true.

But the deed is done and there is nothing to do but hope.

Much more luck to The Junior Post. Sincerely yours,
DOROTHY KINES.

Australian Invitation

The Girl Guides Association of Victoria, Australia, have sent an invitation to leaders and Girl Scouts in this country to attend a gathering of Guides and Guiders from all countries bordering the Pacific, to be held as part of the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the founding and settlment of the State of Victoria and its capital city, Melbourne. The approximate dates for the gathering will be December 28, 1934, to January 7, 1935. The Boy Scouts are holding a jamboree at that time and it is planned to have a joint rally of Scouts and Guides. The Chief Guide of the world will be present if the Chief Scout is able to come as he hopes.

It is proposed to have indoor camps for the Guiders and Guides on the properties of several girls' schools, and a canvas camp will be arranged for those who prefer to camp out of doors. The fee for either camp will be £2 for the period. The program will include visits to places of interest in and around Melbourne, as well as Guide activities. Girl Scouts and leaders interested in this camp should write to Mrs. Lyman Delano, chairman, international committee, Girl Scouts, Inc., 570 Lexington avenue, New York.

The Akron.

On a dark and stormy night while lightning flashed across the sky,
And lighted the waters blue where men were wont to die;
The Akron, queen of the air, sailed
grandly forth to her rendezvous with death.
On her were 73 men, 73 men brave enough with death to dare,
For as they sailed forth they knew not how they'd fare.
I wonder how they felt when that giant ship was plunged to its doom,
In the bottom of the ocean where there was plenty of room?
Now we have to add one more tragedy to that list we honor on Memorial Day.
On that day to the brave and stalwart men who died for our country we will to them our tribute pay
That they may not have died in vain
This Nation should never let her
Navy wane.

Sunrise

The sun is coming o'er the hill,
Its radiant light so bright,
Is shining in our faces
To wake us from the night.

The birds are singing their morning song
Upon the window sill,
The cows are mooing in the barn,
The morning light is still.

The brook is running past the trees
Upon a lonely hill,
The love of peace lies in the soul
Who lives to greet us still.

Rain.

The tulips gay are bobbing
Their bright and cup-shaped heads.
The wide, wide sky is sobbing
And shaking its downy beds.

The rain is blithely falling
On every vale and hill,
And the birds are faintly calling
As they fly o'er pond and rill.

The water is swiftly filling
Every bubbling, sparkling brook,
And oh, if I could only find
A nice, dry sunny nook.

Juliette Low Memorial Awards, 1934.

Mary Elizabeth Stone, of Harrisburg, Pa., in Region 3, and Marguerite Manion, of Firth, Idaho, in Region 11, both Golden Eaglet Girl Scouts 18 years old, will represent the Girl Scouts of the United States at the international encampment to be held from July 1 to 14 at Our Chalet in Adelboden, Switzerland, this summer. They have been chosen by the National Executive Committee to receive the 1934 Juliette Low Memorial Awards. A Girl Scout from Region 12 will also be sent to the Chalet, but has not yet been selected. Juliette Low Memorial Awards for attendance at the encampment will also be given this year to Girl Scouts or Guides in Canada, France, Latvia and Lithuania.

Mrs. H. L. F. Locke, of Hartford, Conn., is to be the captain in charge of the American Girl Scouts this summer. In addition to spending a fortnight at the Chalet, the girls from this country will have several days of sightseeing in Paris and London, and they will also visit Foxlease, one of the training schools for Guiders in England.

Family Pew.

By Rachel Field.

I wonder if my great-grandmother felt
Air half so keen, and sweet with salt and bay,
On such a summer Sunday as she knelt
In this old pew and heard the parson pray?

I wonder if she saw white clouds stream by
Through that same narrow window, if the trees
Were darkly green against so blue a sky,
Pointing their tips as solemnly as these?

I wonder if she heard such gay birds sing
Above the sermon and doxology;
If she was glad for each shrill twittering,
For hum of bees and boom of distant sea?

Beneath some prim and flower-patterned dress,
Did her heart stir, as mine, to quickened beat?
And was she dumb in sudden thankfulness
That she was young, and the round earth so sweet?

—From the American Girl Magazine.

The Stream.

I prate over sandy ways,
In little sticks and stones,
I bubble into running bays,
And play among my tunes.

By little hills I hurry by,
To slip between their ridges,
And among thorns, a little bush,
And a good amount of bridges.

I prate, prate, as I go,
To join the swiftness of the river,
For tree may be and tree may not,
But I will be forever.

The Frog's Message.

At evening, when the sun has set,
And darkness falls around;
When fireflies circle round the trees
And dew is on the ground;
When cows come home from pasture
And birds have ceased to sing;
All around the old mill pond
The trees begin to ring
With croak, croak, croak, croak, croak,
The bullfrog says again that it is spring.

Memories.

I live again o'er my memories;
When I was a child, in bygone days,
Many were the foolish things I did
As I frolicked with my childish ways.

I loved to play with my small playmates;
Sharing our cookies, our candy, too.
I never tired of the old playhouse,
Or said, "I wish I knew what to do!"

Memories, sweet memories, of childhood days,
There are many that we can all tell—
Treasured and cherished thoughts like these—
Which in our hearts forever shall dwell.

Aspiration.

We are the hopeful students of the school,
Striving in every fiber to succeed
With word and thought as well as glorious deed,
Our future destinies to shape and rule.
The faith we have in life shall be our tool
And if that wond'rous faith should pine and die,
Some gleam of hope our souls could still descry
In all the lovely things which miss the fool.
Our untired hopes are fixed on higher goals
Marching ever steadfast and ever brave,
Our minds aflame with some creative fire.
We faint not, though the road is marked with shoals,
Our purpose ever holds and ne'er will waive
Until we reach the height of our desire.

S is for the smiles she showers on us.
T is tenderness early and late.

To an Unknown Poet.

You're like the winds of October
That are not seen as they pass,
But leave the path that they follow
Strewn with leaves and with grass.

You're gone and your name forgotten,
You perished perhaps at the dawn
Of a life that you wanted to follow—
But the words that you wrote will live on.

Bravery.

Bravery is a characteristic which anyone should be proud to own, for a brave person is honored by all. Bravery does not necessarily mean that one must be a knight who rescues a fair princess from a dragon, or an aviator who dares to take long nonstop flights, or a soldier who fights a mighty battle, for one can be brave without being any such hero.

This is easily proved, for among those receiving the Carnegie medals for bravery in 1919, 34 were 19 years of age or under. Seven of them were girls ranging from 13 to 19 years. The boys were from 10 to 19 years old. So you see that you do not have to be old and learned or hold some particular position to be brave.

Whether or not you are brave is often brought out in your everyday life. Bravery can be determined by the way you react when the teacher gives you a test. Are you brave enough to take that test fairly, without cheating? Can you face the consequences when you take home a poor report card or are sent to the office for bad conduct in class. Do you possess enough bravery to keep your wits about you when a catastrophe has taken place? If you can look at the sunny side of life, be prepared for all kinds of weather, and can stand your ground with a smile on your face and a word of cheer on your lips all through life, no matter what the trial, you are just as brave as he who fights a battle or saves a life.

The News.

Birds are flying here and there,
Chirping news everywhere!
Fowers whisper it as they nod, so gay,
Oh, the news was being told today!
Grasses are telling it to the breeze,
Birds are chirping it to the trees!
Now, what did this news bring?
If you can't guess, I'll tell you—it's spring!

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Laird Kiltie of Hydegree (Mascot of The Junior Post).

Bow, wow, wow! I am so busy being an editor that I have not time to plant all the bones I want to in our garden. My letters alone take up lots of time. But how I do like to get them and what nice letters the pets do write. I guess I will have to get a secretary just to chew open leters if my mail keeps on being so much as it is now.

Hop-Toy Pekingnese wants to be editor of this corner. Of course Hop-Toy has helped a lot with it all his life and is very editorial looking. If I decide to take a vacation I may let Hop-Toy make believe he is editor by sitting at my typewriter. Of course he can not wear my eyeglasses because I want to take them with me so I can get a lot of news. I have a nose for news I am told, but I do think the eyeglasses help me to pick up news, too. Bow, wow, wow, wow!

Sandy Orkney Terrier Gordon has been talking about being editor, too. I feel that if he should wear my eyeglasses and break by typewriter I will have the law on him even if he does live in the house with a judge.

Kiel Police Dog has just been to see me. Of course I like Kiel very much, but he takes up so much room that I do not like him to stroll in my garden. Kiel is a handsome boy and when he stands on the terrace outside of his house he looks like a piece of sculpture. You see I am an editor.

My brother, Angus Scottie, who came down from Vermont to look over the political situation in Washington, says that he thinks any kind of a new deal that will deal out chops and beefsteaks would be very good. So far, he says, he has only found cut-up meat but that before long he will discover just where whole slices can be found. Bow, wow, wow! Augus is also studying music and lives with a very musical family. His own voice, however, could be improved.

Daisy and Pansy are taking a rest cure on the verandas most every summer day. They like to get as near as possible to the window in which Mr. Tweet Canary has his Golden Bungalow, so that they can hear him sing.

Mike Great Dane goes on an inspection tour two or three times a day and reports that the birds are coming along very nicely in building their houses, and he thinks the roses will bloom all summer. Bow, wow, wow, wow!

(Awarded $1.)

Dear Laird Kiltie: I think that what you wrote about me last Sunday in The Junior Post was as cute as could be. If I must say so myself you are the cutest little Scottie that ever lived. I will be glad when you are old enough to play with me. Just think of the fun we will have with an old torn up box or a ball. Boy, won't we have fun! Just to think of it makes me want to do it now. I think I will say "woof, woof," when we meet again.

Your pal and admirer.

Dear Laird Kiltie: I am writing in place of Trouble this week because he met with an accident. Yesterday while playing in the park he saw a duck and began barking at him. The duck, not approving of it, started after Trouble.

Trouble is now lying in the sofa bandaged up, sincerely wishing he had not bothered the duck.

Sincerely yours, TROUBLE.

Dear Laird Kiltie: Are elephants too large to write letters? Well, perhaps some people think so, but I don't, because that's just what I'm doing. I am a baby elephant 2 years of age and my mother is in the circus. My mother said that when I grow older that I will also be in the circus. Every day my master teaches me tricks. Here comes my master into our tent. He wants to teach me some new tricks, I guess.

Well, I had just as soon mail this letter before I go. Several years from now when I am in the circus, I hope you will come and see me put on my act. Your large friend,
BE BA BO.

Lyna Wilson (age 14), 2514 Fourteenth street northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie: I am a mother of three kittens. My name is Topsy. I am going to name my kittens Bobby, Betty and Tommy. My color is gray and black spots. One of my kittens is just like me. The other ones are plain black. My kittens are two weeks old.

Oh! Oh! I better go and keep the pen and paper for my master is coming. Yours sincerely, TOPSY.

Mamie Seminara (age 12), Blue Plains, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie: Here I am again. Bow, wow, wow! Woof! Have you ever pulled a clothesline down? I did, and believe me I didn't again. I suppose you know the rest.

I have just been chasing some cats. Fine sport. Did you ever try it? I like it lots.

I hid a bone by the rose bush and what do you think? When I went there it was gone. Bones are walking away. I'll have to close.

A doggie friend, NED.

Olda Aumack, Burnleys, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie: How do you do! I am a new pet to your corner. I am a big collie and by name is Peewee. My mistress' friend thought I was such a nice dog that I should write to you. She is writing this letter for me. Hah! she thinks I'm nice but really I can be very, very naughty.

I have a lot of pals here. There are six of us. We have a grand time. There is a river near our house and we often take a swim. I live in southern Virginia. It is real nice here. I live on a peanut farm.

During the summer when it is hot we go in swimming with our master and mistress' friends. It's loads of fun. Once I saved my mistress. I was sure a hero then! I got ice cream and a big bone.

Well, I must say 'bye.
PEEWEE.

Nadine Davis (age 13), 1409 Sixteenth street northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie: This is my first time at writing, so please excuse my nonsense. I am a little brown and white dog, supposed to be a Boston Bull and Foxterrier, just about 4 months old, but believe me, I am some fellow. If it isn't one thing I'm into it's another. Oh boy! Watch out. When I get real noisy I see my mistress coming with a switch. I lie down close to the ground and beg for mercy; and, of course, you know I always get it.

One day I wanted to play with the baby chicks, which you know is very unusual for dogs like me. My mistress told me to be good, but swellhead like. I thought I knew best. I ran and she did, too, but I was going so fast and so was she that she fell down, and from now on I shall try to be a better dog.

A FOOLISH LITTLE TRIXIE.

Bessie F. Keys (age 15), Clifton Station, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie

I am just one duck in a flock of twelve. However, because I am of a different color I am a pet. I used to be "little," but I am grown now. When I was young I was named Diddle. If I had had any sense I would not have stood for it, but, alas, I did not. I have three known sisters. They are Doddle, Duddle and Wobble. However, we're not talking of them. They can write their own letters.

I have a large mud puddle to swim in. (Usually the mud is too thick to swim.) I do not look like an Easter duck, but I was one last year. DIDDLE.

NADINE DAVIS, (age 13),
1409 Sixteenth street northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie:

I really am upset. Whiskers, the cat that lives next door, came over to my house yesterday while I was out and scratched and chewed my new ball all to pieces, and then went and slept on my own special pillow. I think that cats should be tied up instead of dogs. Lad thinks so, too. He advised me to wait until Whiskers woke up. He has had experience with cats before.

Sincerely yours,
TROUBLE.

JEAN ALLER,
1427 Chapin street northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie:

I haven't written to you for a long time, have I?

Well, I have a last-go for you. I heard someone say the other day, they thought you were the best mascot for the Junior Post they had ever seen.

I hope you have a grand time dancing around the May Pole, and I hope you had a chance to peep at the cherry blossoms.

I have a bone for you when I see you again, so be good.

Wishing you good luck,
SPOT BLANE.

Maryan Sandridge (age 14),
Mechium's River, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie: My name is Tiny and I am a little brown and tan dog with some Pekinese and Spitz blood in my veins. I was born in Scranton, Pa., and came down here to Philadelphia in a train with my mistress.

I have lots of fun these glorious days, such as chasing Mrs. Beck's gray cat, Tommy; running after girls' and boys' bicycles, scaring the baker and the laundry man away and last, the best of all, playing with Mickey, a great big mutt. Such fun as we two have together. Some day I'd like to have you come and play with us because I think editing must get tiresome some times. Oh, boy! we three could have lots of fun.

Yours, with fun,
TINY.

Ruth Jones, 341 Hunting road, Upper Darby, Pa.

Thank You.

Little Mary Smith never said "Thank you" and fretted nearly all day. One night she came in after a long day. Her mother saw that she was fretful so she tried to think of something amusing. At last she thought of a plan.

"Mary," she said, "what would you like to have most of all?" Mary's face brightened. "A garden," she exclaimed full of joy. "Very well," said her mother, "if you say 'Thank you' ten times tomorrow you will get it."

And Mary said "Thank you" ten times.

Home.

It still leans beside the road where the children used to play,
Struggling, as it seems, to stand
just one more day;
Through its old and torn roof it
sheds its bitter tears,
A lonely and forsaken house that waited all those years
To hear again the voices that once rang within its walls,
To hear familiar footsteps along its faded halls.
But the echo of those noises has left the cold, still air—
The baby's laugh, the father's song, the mother's faithful prayer
Are only memories to those who loved and held them dear.
The feet that trod those creaking floors have rested many a year.
Only one child now is left with dream of "used to be"—
One child and those old crumbling walls that once meant home to me.

A Change.

Lila had always loved to draw. From the time she was a tiny tot she has always drawn. However, as she grew older she took to writing. When she heard of the Junior Post she never gave her drawings a thought, but she did send in several stories. One day she showed her mother a picture she meant to contribute. Her mother laughted and told her she better stick to writing. Regardless of everyone's mirth Lila sent in her precious illustration. Week after week she waited, but her picture did not appear. Lila's father declared she was getting thin from pining.

Lately, Lila had had nothing in The Junior Post for she spent her time drawing.

Lila had always thought she could write and she always knew her drawings were terrible, but, still, she kind of hoped her drawing would be published. Who could blame her? There is but a little bit more to this story. Only that Lila changed from an artist to an authoress, once more. By the way, this is a true story.

Hiking.

By Martha Haven.

We are going for a hike,
You and I, far afield.
What surprises, what adventure,
What new treasure, will it yield?

Once we followed tinkling sheepbells,
Once we heard a strange bird cry,
Once we climbed the tumbled boulders
Where a mountain stream was dry.

Once we found a yellow maple
Like a globe of amber light
Burning on the darkening hilltop
When all else had paled from sight.

We are going on a quest,
By a path we do not know.
We are ready, we are eager—
Say the word and let us go!

—From The American Girl Magazine.

Moonlight Night.

Come where the dew has diamonds made,
Come where the moon shines
bright,
Watch the daylight slowly fade,
And the stars like candles of night.

Come and forget the trouble and strife,
See the moonlight road of the milky way,
Come and learn the joys of life,
Leave trouble for another day.

Hear the nightingales softly sing,
And watch the stream as it flows,
While from the village a churchbell rings,
And a shooting star flaming goes.

Life is so short and death so long,
That too much we spend in a day,
Worrying over right and wrong,
Until our life has passed away.

The Junior Post Airship

"Off to the review of the fleet," sang out the pilot as he tuned up the airship in preparation for the weekly tour of the world for the benefit of the readers of The Junior Post.

"I am with you there. I never miss the review of the United States Navy Fleet if I can help it. But of course there are some other places we have to go first," the editor replied as he settled himself comfortably in the seat of the airship.

"Well then," the pilot suggested, "I guess the first place we had better go is to Arlington to see the Memorial Day services."

"Right you are," said the editor. "There they go, that thin blue line of Union Veterans marching so valiantly along with the veterans of the World War and other wars. There is the thin gray line of the Confederate veterans, too, just as gallant. I think it is a wonderful thing to pay tribute to the brave of the North and South of the Civil War at the same time we pay tribute to the brave of the Spanish-American War and the World War. Because there were no North and South when they all joined hands and fought in the same army and navy and marine corps for the Star Spangled Banner, the Flag of the United States of America."

"Then of course we must go to Lakehurst to escort the Navy when they go to place flowers on the ocean near the spot where the Uniter States airship, the Akron; Admiral Moffett and many other gallant officers and men of the Naval Aviation Service went down in April, 1933," the editor directed.

As they come over the place on the Atlantic seashore where the services were being carried on and the flowers sent out to sea, the airship again dipped in a token of respect.

Then, just because they liked to see what was going on in their own country before they started out to see the world, the pilot at the editor's suggestion turned the nose of the airship toward Chicago. They looked down on the part of the "Windy City" that was ravaged by fire last week and marveled at the efficient manner in which the "city fathers" had "cleaned up" and the rebuilding that was already going on. Then they circled about the Century of Progress Grounds and decided that the Exposition this year was to be as entertaining and as successful as last year.

Then they floated over Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, just in time to see Henry Ford visiting the birthplace of Stephen Collins Foster, composer of "Suwanee River." Mr. Ford has purchased this house and will have it reerected in Greenfield Village, Michigan.

As they flew along they saw graduation exercises and graduation festivities on the campuses of many of the colleges.

Then across the ocean to England they flew to witness the presentation of the Walker Cup to Francis Ouimet, captain of the American team of golfers. The ceremony took place at St. Andrews and the cup was presented by Sir Ernest Blackwell. The American team defeated the British team with a final score of 9 matches to 2.

Just to keep up with the times they flew on to Paris to see the celebration of Jeanne d'Arc day, patriotic celebration and communists' demonstrations making the Paris streets very lively indeed.

Summer Pastimes.

Summer will soon be here. Many of us are planning to go away, but there are many pleasant things we can do at home. One of these things is reading.

All the girls would enjoy "Romona," by Helen Jackson, or "Mary Carey," by Bosher. Any of Gene Stratton Porter's books are entertaining.

The boys will all like "Treasure Island" and other stories by Stevenson, including, "Kidnaped," "Black Arrow," &c. Oh, yes, everyone will find "The Innocents Abroad" by Mark Twain interesting.

Another entertaining pastime is writing or drawing. I expect that during the summer The Junior Post has more material than ever.

Do you know it's fun during the summer to brush up in your school work? Just to take a peek at your books? I suppose it's fun because you do it of your own accord.

There are many other interesting things the stay-at-homes can do, so don't pine away if you have to stay home during the summer.

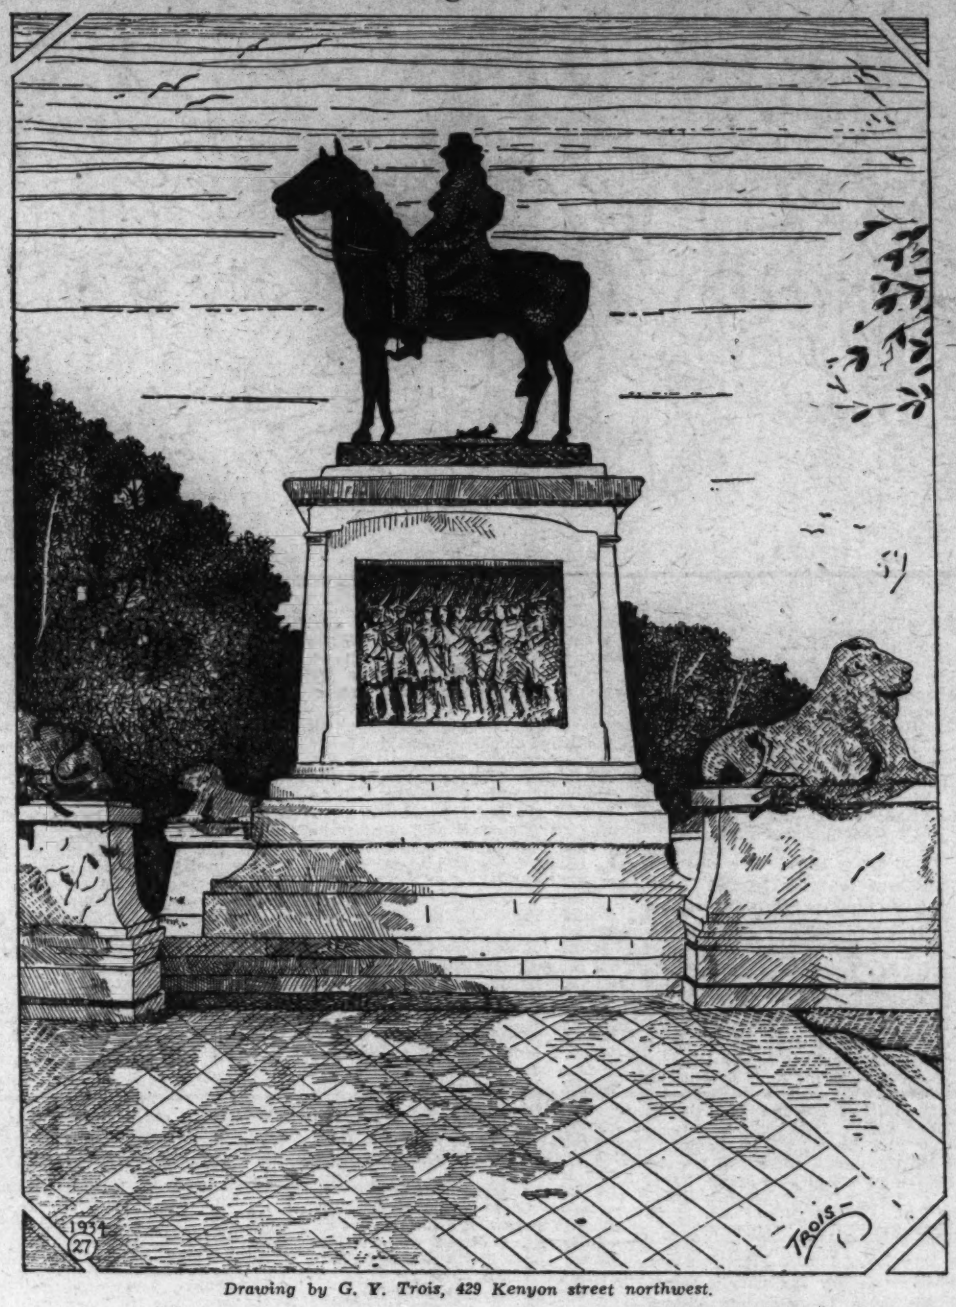
Know Your Washington—Grant Memorial



Drawing by G. Y. Trois, 429 Kenyon street northwest.

The Grant Memorial is at the head of the Mall, at the foot of the Capitol. It was authorized by Congress in the year 1901. It is said that this statue cost the Government more than any other one in the city. The cost was $250,000. It is the second largest equestrian statue in the world. The largest is located in Rome, and is that of Victor Emmanuel, which is less than a half-foot higher.

The monument consists of a marble platform 252 feet in length and 69 feet at its greatest width. There are steps on either side of the statue and marble seating which gives the spectator a chance to view this marvel while resting.

In the center is a pedestal 22 feet 6 inches high, with a monumental bronze figure of Gen. Grant surmounting it. He is shown on horseback as if watching a battle. The horse is 17 feet 6 inches high and is two and a half times life size.

The monument itself is 40 feet high. From Grant's hat to the base of the pedestal is almost 65 feet. The statue weighs 10,500 pounds.

The Infantry is represented by two bronze tablets on each side of the pedestal. Four great bronze lions are at each corner of the main pedestal, guarding the flag.

The single word "Grant" marks the memorial. Eight bronze lamp-posts, four on each pedestal, light the memorial. It was dedicated April 27, 1922. The architect was Edward Pearce Casey and the sculptor was Henry Merwin Shrady, who died just a few days before his work was dedicated. The monument represents his most notable work.

Gen. Grant was elected to the Presidency by the Republicans. He succeeded Johnson. Grant took oath in March, 1869.

Next week—Alexander Hamilton.

The Witch In the Mountains.

Once upon a time there was an old witch who lived up in a high mountain. She was thought to be very mean and some people said whoever touched the fence around her place was in the witch's power.

So one day as a little girl named Louise was wandering in the mountains she came to the witch's house. She stepped upon the fence around the yard to get a flower. Just then the witch ran out of the house and Louise was so frightened she started to run, but the witch waved her wand and commanded Louise to walk. Louise walked into the house and she was so frightened she could have cried. The witch took her hand and said, "Come with me." Louise followed her into what seemed to her a palace. She began to feel less afraid now, and the witch showed her the beautiful house. Louise exclaimed, "Oh, what a beautiful house!" Then the witch smiled and opened a secret door which took them into an underground room. First was a room filled with emeralds, gold, silver, rubies and diamonds. She gave Louise a piece of each. She next took her into a room filled with candy, fruits and cakes. Here she said, "I must go and prepare supper and when you are ready to come out, shout 'Witchy Crosspatch' twice."

Then she went upstairs to get supper. Louise ate and ate and then she called, "Witchy Crosspatch," twice. The witch came and took her to a table filled with food. They ate supper and then Louise said, "I must go home, and can I come to see you again?" "Yes," said the witch, "I like you very much; you are a nice girl. Come to see me again soon."

Louise was no more afraid and she thought the witch not a witch, but a good woman of the mountains.

Sunset.

The sky is golden, red and blue,
The grass is filled with evening dew,
The call is at each person's ear,
That sunset now is drawing near,
And dusk is coming on.

The birds wing homeward to their nests,
The children at their mothers' breasts
Hear songs that ring so sweet and low,
And then to bed they softly go,
For dusk is coming on.

The mountain's gray, and green the hill,
And everything is calm and still,
Through doors the shining lamp lights stream,
While far the whip-poor-will doth scream.
For night has come at last.

The Junior Post Makes Beth Happy.

Beth was a little lame girl. One day Lucy came to see Beth and with her brought a Junior Post. She gave The Junior Post to Beth and Beth read it. She liked it. Beth decided to send in a poem. She sat down and made up a poem and sent it to The Junior Post. At last Sunday came. Lucy came by with The Post and gave it to Beth. Beth looked over it and there was her poem. Why, it had won a prize! Oh, how happy Beth was. She showed it to her proud mother.

A day later Beth received her dollar and she was still happier. She sent more things in to The Junior Post and won more prizes. And it was all because of Lucy, who had came by with The Junior Post. OLDA AUMACK.

The Story Book Lady

"Hurrah, hurrah, for story telling time. Mother or father tells us stories every night and mother is going to give a whole dollar for the best story we can write out of our own heads," Margaret gleefully announced, as she waited on the park bench with Gertrude and Hope for the Story Book Lady and members of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens.

"I like to hear stories and write them," Hope agreed. "Mother says the best way to write good stories is to read good stories."

"Well that is one of the advantages of these pilgrimages to Story Book Land every week with the Story Book Lady," Margaret pointed out.

Mr. Gnome Agrees.

"I agree with Margaret," said the Story Book Lady, who had come up in time to overhear the conversation.

"I do too," agreed Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land.

"Read good books and stories if you want to write good ones. That is what I tell my grandsons, Blick and Flick and Little Mick. They all want to write for The Junior Post, of course, and earn their living as writers when they grow up."

"I am sure they will make good writers," said the Story Book Lady, stopping to smile on the three little grandsons of Mr. Gnome before she led the way through the Fairy Tale Bridge gate.

Mr. Gnome and his three grandsons held the gate open wide until the Story Book Lady and the members of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens passed through. Then they all stood in a row and made deep bows, with their green hats with the scarlet feathers in their hands.

"I think that you can write good fairy tales by reading good fairy tales," the Story Book Fairy announced as she flew out of the Fairy Tale Forest in her golden airplane, followed by Merry and Jolly, the Story Book Fairy Children, in their own golden airplanes.

"This seems to be a very nice Story Book Street," exclaimed Evelyn, as they came to the first book street. "Can we go down here, dear Story Book Lady?"

Uses Magic Glasses.

"Of course, dear," said the Story Book Lady, leading the way and putting her magic glasses firmly on her nose.

"Let me see. It is called 'Klaas and Jansje, Children of the Dikes,' by Virginia Olcott, with illustrations by Constance Whittemore (Silver, Burdett & Co., New York). It is a nice book about nice children."

"I think I would like this," Anne suggested, as they hurried on to see the other sights of Story Book Land.

"I am sure we all will." The Story Book Lady agreed, leading the way down the book street.

"This is a nice-looking street and I am sure the book is very nice, 'Manhattan, Now and Long Ago,' by Lucy Sprague Mitchell and Clara Lambert (the Macmillan Co., New York). It is full of photographs collected by the authors and maps by Lucy Sprague Mitchell. Just see what a nice picture of the George Washington Bridge there is on the cover."

"Oh, oh! This looks exciting," shouted William. "A jungle story."

"Well, of course it is," the Story Book Lady said with a smile.

"It is 'Jothy, a Story of the South Indian Jungle,' by Charlotte Chandler Wyckoff, with illustrations by Kurt Wiese (Longmans, Green & Co., New York)."

Mother.

Mother is a helping hand
On the road to success.
O'er the hard and stony land,
She saves us from many a mess.

Up the step ladder of Life, on and on,
With a steady hand she guides us;
Mother, mother who is sweet yet so firm,
At her bid, do that much we must.

Mother your greatest companion,
Whether in a shack or in a mansion,
A child's very best friend,
Our love for her shall never end.

The President Chooses His Favorite Naval

From his own personal collection, one of the finest in the world, President Roosevelt selected the ship pictures on this page for The Washington Post. Even before his days as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, during the Wilson administration, Franklin D. Roosevelt was a collector of rare etchings and wood cuts of marine subjects, an enthusiasm which he maintained as Governor of New York and President of the United States.

Reproduced here are the choicest of a group which forms an almost complete pictorial history of the United States Navy.

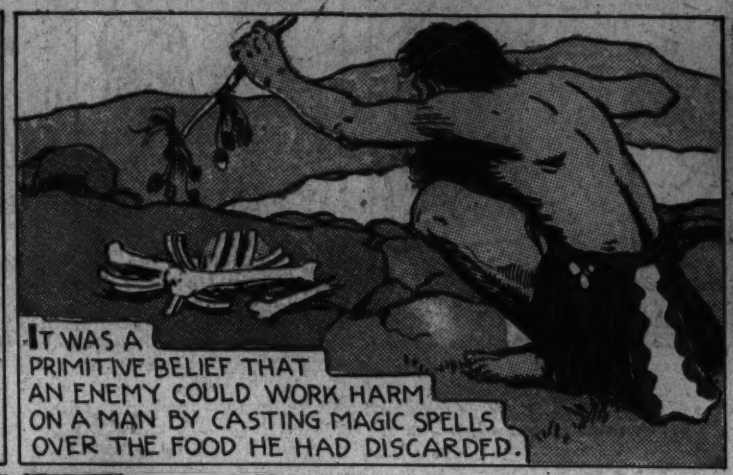
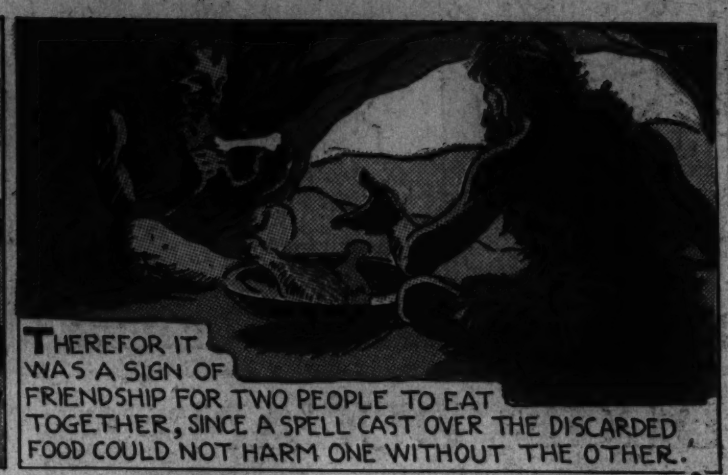
HOW IT BEGAN

by PAUL BERDANIER

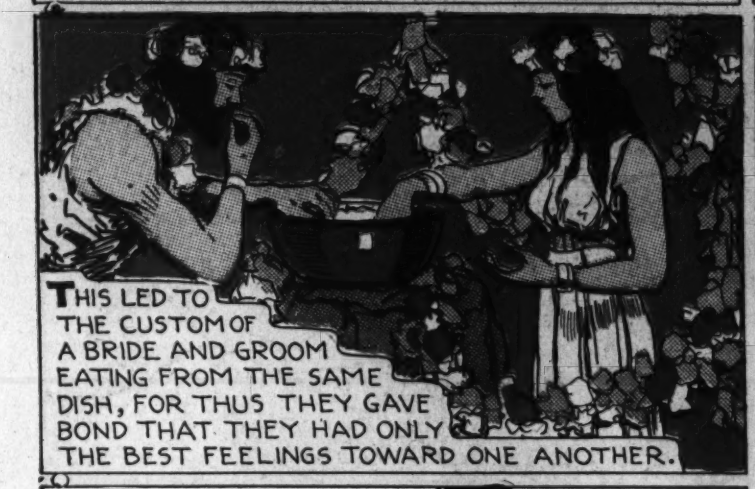
THE WEDDING FEAST



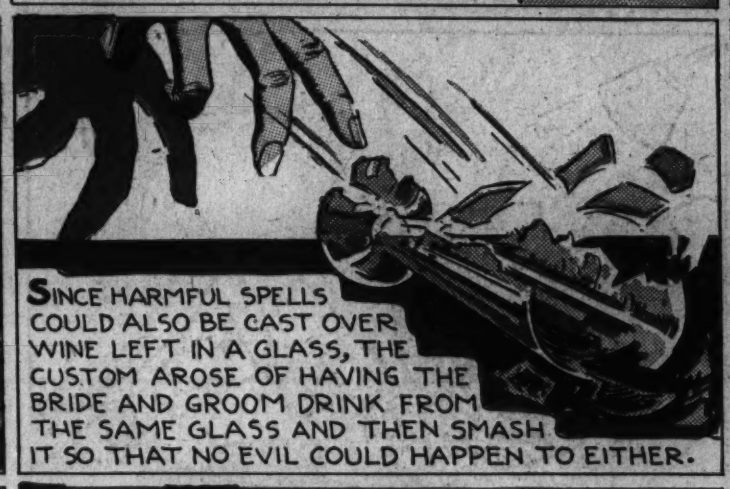
IT WAS A PRIMITIVE BELIEF THAT AN ENEMY COULD WORK HARM ON A MAN BY CASTING MAGIC SPELLS OVER THE FOOD HE HAD DISCARDED.



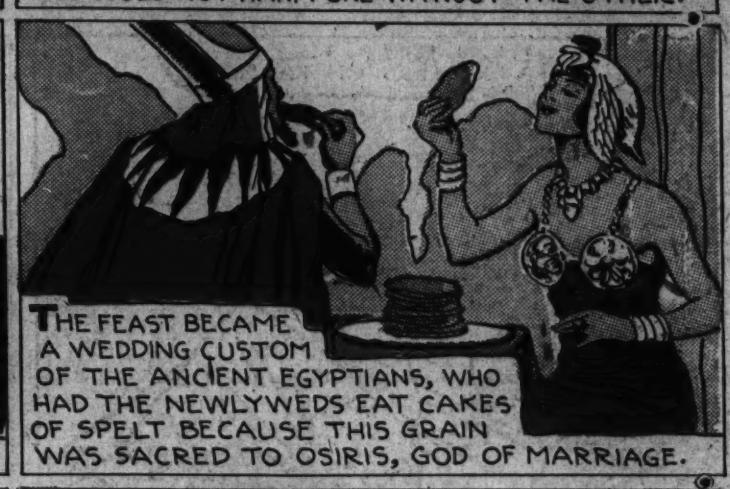
THEREFOR IT WAS A SIGN OF FRIENDSHIP FOR TWO PEOPLE TO EAT TOGETHER, SINCE A SPELL CAST OVER THE DISCARDED FOOD COULD NOT HARM ONE WITHOUT THE OTHER.



THIS LED TO THE CUSTOM OF A BRIDE AND GROOM EATING FROM THE SAME DISH, FOR THUS THEY GAVE BOND THAT THEY HAD ONLY THE BEST FEELINGS TOWARD ONE ANOTHER.



SINCE HARMFUL SPELLS COULD ALSO BE CAST OVER WINE LEFT IN A GLASS, THE CUSTOM AROSE OF HAVING THE BRIDE AND GROOM DRINK FROM THE SAME GLASS AND THEN SMASH IT SO THAT NO EVIL COULD HAPPEN TO EITHER.



THE FEAST BECAME A WEDDING CUSTOM OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS, WHO HAD THE NEWLYWEDS EAT CAKES OF SPELT BECAUSE THIS GRAIN WAS SACRED TO OSIRIS, GOD OF MARRIAGE.

IN ANCIENT ROME ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGES WERE ACCOMPANIED BY AN ELABORATE BANQUET, AT WHICH THE BRIDE AND GROOM ATE AND DRANK TOGETHER.

LATER THE FEAST BECAME SEPARATED FROM THE MARRIAGE CEREMONY, AND TOOK PLACE UPON PAYMENT OF THE BRIDE-PRICE BY THE GROOM.

AND TODAY WE STILL FEEL IT ESSENTIAL FOR THE MARRIED PAIR AND THEIR FRIENDS TO EAT TOGETHER AT THE WEDDING FEAST.

Strange as it seems, not all of Nova Scotian territory is in the New World. Part of it is in Scotland. The esplanade, or parade ground of Edinburgh Castle, Scotland, is legally Nova Scotian territory, made so by declaration of King Charles I and never since returned to Scottish jurisdiction.

The reason for this change in jurisdiction was this: Certain of Charles I's baronets were given land grants in Nova Scotia by the crown. In order to take possession of their lands it was deemed proper that they go to Nova Scotia, but this meant a trip across the Atlantic in the days when few crossings were made for pleasure. Next best thing, if the baronets did not care to go to Nova Scotia, was to bring Nova Scotia to them. This Charles did by declaring the parade grounds a part of Nova Scotia.

The basketball game between the Albatross Reserves and the Aves Club was a tie at the end of the regulation four periods. It was still a tie after four scoreless overtime periods. The ninth period decided the contest for Albatross, 21-17. During the game three referees were used, but only two substitute players were called on.

Philip Spencer, midshipman in the United States Navy, was hanged aboard his ship for attempting to organize a mutiny among the sailors. His father, at the time, was secretary of war in President Tyler's cabinet. Spencer's execution was upheld by a naval court of inquiry and by a court martial after the ship docked in New York.
